ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting question of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first Eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Fourth annual young bird show, July 8th. Entries numbered 139, and the competition was very keen indeed. Mr. John Oldaker placed the cards to the satisfaction of all. There were some 23 special prizes in all (the society spending 50s. on specials), and an extra special for the best young Mule (presented by Mrs. Weston), and won by Mr. W. Ward, with a very nice Siskin Mule. The bird which the judge considered the best in the show was a very nice, typical Norwich, shown hy Mr. J. Hyde (amateur). The novice Norwich were excellent, there being 27 birds in the two classes, the winners in these classes repectively were Mr. B. Johnson (who received the good wishes of all in show, this being his first success after his recent misfortune), and Mr. Wills. There was a very fine show of British birds, the two principal winners being Mrs. Giddy and Mr. Kent, both showing some very fine birds. The attendance was poor, but the Secretary knows he can rely on his members to make up the deficiency by taking those tickets which they were unable to sell, and so make the show another financial success; unless this is done there will be a small loss.—C. W. Law, Hon. Sec.

REDRUTH.

Held July 5 and 6, in the Recreation Ground and proved a great success, the entries for the summer show coming up exceedingly well, totalling close upon 240. The quality, too, was of the very best, making the competition in most of the classes very keen. The exhibits were nicely staged in tiers in the centre of the tent, and were thoroughly well looked after by a capital lot of stewards, who left nothing to be desired. The hon. secs., Messrs. Opie and Kemp, are a pair of thoroughly capable and hard-working officials, and were most courteous and obliging to all. We need hardly add that everything went as smoothly as clockwork. The awards were made by Mr. J. H. Payne (Gloucester).

WALKLEY AND DISTRICT C.B.S

Nest feather show June 24th, held in the St. Philip's Schoolroom, Westmoreland Street, when we had nearly 100 birds staged, there being some very promising ones amongst them, A. Lawton taking special for best bird in show with a beautiful Norwich, which, I think, will be heard of later. G. H. Butler specials for best Yorkshire, with a very nice Yellow, and J. and C. Scott special for best British. Judge, Mr. Champion, who gave satisfaction to all. We had a very good day considering the weather. Thanks are due to Mr. Woolhouse and Mr. Lawton, the stewards, who worked very hard indeed. Will members and friends kindly note our next meeting night, July 13th, at 8 p.m., when we are having a table show of Canaries?

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

First feather show held June 28th, at headquarters, Sydenham Hotel, Small Heath. Everything was a marked success. The show stewards, Messrs. Perks, Hall and Stevxenson, under the able control of Show Manager Wright, had the 64 birds all nicely displayed and ready for judging at 7p.m. sharp. Judge Russell's task was no easy one, but his awards were received with the utmost satisfaction. When the doors were thrown open a large crowd soon filled the showroom, and visitors who accompanied the members were more than delighted with the display. The various classes being numbered no difficulty was experienced in locating them with the help of the hand catalogue, which was much admired. Amongst those present were several fanciers from Scotland, visiting Birmingham for the Convention at the Town Hall. Chairman Willmott, in a neat speech, welcomed all, and proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Russell for so kindly judging; to the show manager and his stewards for placing the birds so well; and to our treasurer for the use of the room, expressing his opinion that it was the best nest feather show held in Birmingham for some years. Judge Russell spoke in eulogistic terms of the birds shown. The specials were awarded as follows: Champion Class, Best Yorks., 2/6 cash to Mr. Kidner; best birds in Champion Class, Mr. Wright; best Mule, Mr. Matthews; best British, Mr. Hague; best Border, Mr. Murray; best Cinnamon marked, Mr. Hall; Novice: Silver medal for best birds, also for best Buff, Mr. Harry Manders; best Yorkshire (silver winner excluded), Mr. Fields; for best Norwich, no competition. (The giver of this requested me to hand the prize to Mr. West; he will provide another for July show). Most points throughout the show, Mr. Stevenson. It is to be hoped that our July show will even eclipse the June show for entries; Mr. J. H. Roe judged. Will members please note that the monthly meeting will be held on Wednesday, July 19th?

PLUMSTEAD & WOOLWICH C.B.S.

Fourth young stock show, held at Trinity Schoolroom, Beresford Street, Woolwich, on July 1. The arrangements were in the hands of the hon. secretaries, Messrs. Meades and Woolgar, whose enthusiasm and practical experience combined to cater for success. The staging was convenient and well placed, and there was a nice light for judging. Cards were up promptly, and catalogues of awards out in good time, and at the "nimble" price of 2d. During the evening a well-sustained concert of vocal and instrumental music provided enjoyment for the visitors, in addition to the viewing of the birds. There was quite a nice entry of Canaries, and the quality throughout was excellent, some birds of rare promise being on view. Mr. E. Meades won the medal for the best in the show with a really nice buff Norwich. This bird is well set on strong legs, neat in head and beak, nice back, short wings and tail, and has size into the bargain with lovely silky feather. Mr. D. Williams won special for best in Novices Section, also with a Norwich Plainhead of superb feather and running Mr. Meades hard for premier show honours. There was also a nice collection of British, and a couple of Foreign Goldies. The society is to be congratulated on the display. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged.

FIRST FEATHER SHOWS.

Important Offer: Secretaries, Note!

We have decided again this year to accept advertisements of First Feather (young bird) shows at the reduced charge of 3s. 6d. per single column inch (2s. the half inch). And we will present a special prize of a framed coloured plate to all societies spending not less than 10s. 6d. in advertising their Young Bird Show in our columns.

Secretaries taking advantage of this offer should state very clearly in their advertisements the date, time, and place of the show. These particulars put before our readers will, without doubt, result in a much greater attendance at these early fixtures, and the making of new members, while the "gate-money" (where a charge is made) will benefit, and the sale of catalogues, too. This special cheap rate, of course, only applies to First Feather shows.

Secretaries should note that we can print at very favourable rates, show schedules, posters in colours, and ornamental prize-cards. Send for samples and prices.

Windhill play the Rest of the Fancy at cricket on Saturday, July 15, at the Hare and Hounds, Menston, writes Mr. T. Ogden. All intending players or spectators meet at the Midland Station, Bradford, not later than two o'clock to catch train which leaves three minutes past two o'clock.

There will be thirteen classes in all. The judges are Mr. D. Smart for Scotch and Border fancies; Mr. A. Eadie, for Crests and Norwich; Mr. W. Scaife and Mr. J. Ovenstone, for Mules, Brit. and For. birds. I trust the members will make our first show a success.

Please remind secretaries of northern societies that we allot patronage at our next meeting, Aug. 14, and that their applications for the patronage of the Northern Border and Scotch Fancy Club should be sent in as soon as possible, writes Mr. J. N. F. Scott (186, Cartington Terrace, Newcastle), as we have only a limited number of shows to allot patronage to, and there are already some applications in. Secretaries should state classification given (Scotch and Borders), also judge.

Where are you spending August Bank Holiday? If your thoughts turn towards a fine live-stock exhibition, combined with a really first-class sports meeting and other entertainments, don't forget Cambridge Mammoth Show on August 7. It is a splendid affair, and provides a great day's amusement at a very small cost, while part of the profit is devoted to charity. This huge fixture is held on the pleasant Midsummer Common. Fanciers should apply for a schedule (note advertisement).

OBITUARY.

Mr. W. SHARP (Barrow-in-Furness).

It is with great regret I have to report the death of one of our life members, Mr. W. Sharp, writes Mr. Wm. Templeton, sec., Barrow-in-Furness C.B.A. He held the position of auditor for a great number of years, and was respected by all fanciers who came into contact with him. Our sympathy is with the widow in her sad bereavement.

Mr. J. E. Hudson, secretary, Laisterdyke B.F.A., writes:—Members of our society will hear with very deep regret of the sad loss which Mr. W. B. Swaine has sustained by the death of his wife under very painful circumstances and after only a brief illness. I feel sure that members and the Fancy generally will extend to him their heartfelt sympathy in this sad hour of trial. We sincerely trust that some small ray of comfort will come to him out of the thought that others are sympathising with him during the calamity which has befallen him and which has deprived him of one so near and dear. One and all hope that strength may be given to him to bear up under the heavy burden that has been cast upon him.

As a precaution against mice, place an ordinary glass jam jar under the legs of cage racks, and the mice will be unable to climb up the glass, writes Mr. A. Ainsworth (Accrington).

Mr. W. Davies (Aberaman, S. Wales) writes: Kindly allow me to thank Messrs. Trower and Co., of London, for their special prize of a gold medal, won by me at the 1911 Crystal Palace Show (as runner-up for the most points in the open championship section), which I was most pleased to receive.

Will secretaries of societies in Kent desiring the patronage of the Kent County C.C.A. at their forthcoming show please make application as early as possible, as the allotting of patronage is on the agenda for the August monthly meeting? Please state date of show and name of C.B. judge. The committee will be pleased to hear from county members who have suggestions to make on the above subject.—A. Hendry, hon. sec. (36, Clarendon Place, Dover).

The Canary Cup Competition in connection with Cardiff C.B.S. three shows proves very interesting, writes Mr. J. W. Dummett, the sec. At the pair show H. C. Smith was the leader by two points from E. Thomas, S. F. Whetton coming third, one point behind. At our late Young Bird Show S. F. Whetton took first place with a total of 66 points, H. C. Smith second place with 57 points, and E. Thomas third with 51 points, E. Thomas coming next with 46. In the British Cup E. Thorne is "on his own" with 72, and Mr. Shellam in Mules, 21. For the first-named competition at our Open Show in November excitement will be great. Will all members please attend the meeting on July 20?

The Council of the King Edward National Memorial desire at least three prominent persons in every town and village throughout the country to volunteer to act as a local committee of the Hon. Grand Council, which aims to purchase the Crystal Palace as the King Edward National Memorial. They also require three influential persons in each town and village to act as collectors of instalments towards the £1 1s. life admission tickets, and to sell Crystal Palace stamps on commission. Readers are earnestly invited to write offering their services or suggesting those persons in the locality most suited to the above offices, so that the persons can be officially approached. Letters should be marked "Committee," and addressed to the Right Hon. the Earl of Kinnoull, D.L., Hon. Treas., 28, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.

A Holder for Nest Pans.

Sent by G. Brown, 9, Burgher Street, Glasgow.

I am sending you a sketch of a simple holder for the wire hanger of a nest pan, instead of using a hook. Get a piece of cage wire, and with pliers bend to shape as seen at top of sketch. Then bore two small holes in the back of the breeding cage for the ends of the wire holder to go through. Hold something solid (such as a flat-iron) against A, on the inside of the cage, hammer ends of wire in cage at the back, and it is finished. Take your wire nest-pan hanger, upside down, and slide it into the slot, when you will never be troubled with any rocking of the nest when a bird jumps on to the edge of the pan. I am using it myself this year, and find it an improvement on the hook. I hope other readers will find it same.—George Brown.

A Door Fastener.

Sent by T. Noddings, 26, Strathclyde Street, Dalmarnock, Glasgow.

I enclose a sketch of a door fastener which I find very neat, and secure, for box and show cages. All that is required is an ordinary hinge (as shown at A). Take out the rivet and file off one shoulder, then replace bolt, as shown in "B." The bolt is made of 16-gauge cage wire (as shown in C). All the tools required are a pair of pliers, a small file, and a screwdriver, with some little tacks. At right of sketch is seen cage door complete, with hinge screwed on, and fastener.—T. Noddings.

Young Bird Shows.

We have received this week an unprecedented number of reports of young bird (first feather) shows—over 70, which is easily a record—and we find it impossible, of course, to publish them all in this issue, and do justice to our other features. Under the circumstances we ask the kindly indulgence of secretaries and exhibitors; all the reports will be published at the earliest possible moment.

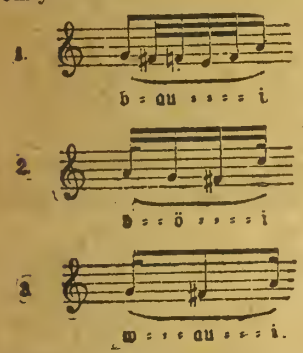
Lost Song Tours of the Roller Canary.

Translated by G. B. Leclair from an original article, by W. Kluhs (Landberg), in "Kanaria."



Many years have passed since the time when for twenty years I uninterruptedly figured as a contributor to "Die Gefiederte Welt," dealing with uncertainties of Canary breeding and rearing, and the development of its song, of which my older fancier friends doubtlessly still have a vivid recollection. My activity ceased on the death of the then editor of "Die Gefiederte Welt," Dr. Karl Russ, but the breeding of valuable songsters still remains a pleasant hobby for me, although on a more moderate scale.

Incited by numerous acquaintances, I propose once more to participate in the solution of uncertain questions, but I have specially been influenced in this decision by the article entitled "The Koller," which appeared in "Kanaria" of November, 1909, but which I regret has only just come to my notice. The examples of notes cited in this article were compiled by me at the time when I was still a military bandmaster, and published in 1877 in "Kanaria." I subsequently made further studies of the Canary's song at the request of Dr. Karl Russ.

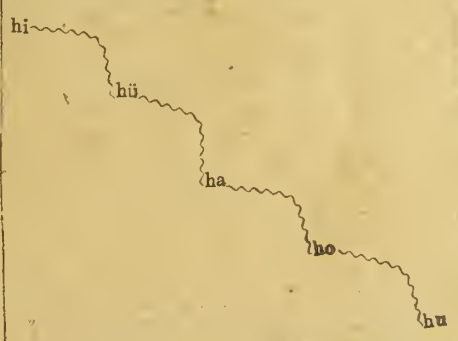
One of the Most Difficult Tours.

I wrote concerning the Koller as follows:—"The Koller is undoubtedly one of the most difficult tours of the Canary's song, and is not easily produced; by many fanciers it is even rated above the hollow-roll for beauty. There is a certain similarity in the Koller to a delightful water-roll, and a hollow schnatter,* but the sound of the koller is round (⌣), deep, and hollow bubbling, whereas that of the schnatter is broad(——). It frequently happens that scarcely a third of a strain acquires this tour, and even of these many songsters neglect or forget it when mutual support is wanting, i.e., when they are separated from songsters of their own class. It may be by reason of this fact that it was formerly considered extinct, until it was made accessible to the Fancy by the veteran Erntges.

The basis of the koller is formed, according to the sound, by "bu, bau, bo, beu, bö and bü," yet the note also forms a ringing (rippling) "i." The bird begins this tour at a measure of four to six beats a second, with the note "b" or "w," bursts out with the fullest force on the deeper notes "u," "au," "o," etc., and then rises a few degrees to their rippling conclusion. As this performance takes place four to six times a second, the execution is so rapid that the ear seems to perceive all three notes simultaneously."

The koller reproduced in No. 1 was incontestibly the finest, as the wavelike part on "au" was produced in a distinctive manner. Such a tour was also called Nightingale-koller. No. 2 was almost as fine. On the other hand that given in No. 3 produced the waves in quicker measure, more carelessly, yet still fine, but was manifestly more easily accomplished by the songster, and it was consequently performed in this way by most of the koller birds that I heard, whilst No. 1 and No. 2 were only performed by the best class songsters.

The first koller songster I heard was that belonging to Otto Brandner, with whom, as a member of the Stettin Ornithological Society in 1876, I was acquainted, and who requested me to listen to this tour and to give a musical and phonetic rendering of it in his paper, "Kanaria"; this appeared in 1877. Brandner acquired his birds from Erntges.



In the second edition of his book, "The Harz Canary," Brandner stated that the koller evolved from the gluck-roll. This leads me to the opinion that the tour might even now turn up again at any moment, just as it came into being from about the year 1850, in the neighbourhood of Andreasberg. Probably it is still here and there present, and looked upon as a water-roll. Be that as it may, it is certain that the tour has never become truly pure song; this could not be accomplished even by such an experienced breeder and judge of song as Erntges, and consequently he finally gave up the tour. According to my personal opinion, the koller, moreover, can by no means vie with a delightful bent hollow-roll in beauty of sound. Its value rather consisted simply in its rarity, although it was much finer than an ordinary water-roll. The complaint concerning the loss of this tour has therefore not the justification that is variously raised in its favour. What breeder of a fine pure strain of songsters would desire to give this up, and exchange it for the koller with impure song?

The so-called Nightingale warblers and gluck songsters have disappeared, like the koller, for the same reason; therefore let us leave the fable of these lost "beautiful" tours to the past, lest we spoil the pleasure of the present delightful song. Why wander afield, when the good is so close at hand?

The Laughing Tour.

Another fine tour alleged to be lost is the "Lach (laugh) roll. "It has tracelessly disappeared without leaving offspring," wrote Brandner in his book, "The Canary."

Not one of all the judges with whom I have spoken concerning this tour, with the exception of Erntges, had ever heard it himself, not even Brandner. It must have disappeared at a far-distant date, and have dropped through 3 octaves. Just think of this! for the whole of the Canary's song, as a rule, encompasses scarcely three octaves. Accordingly, the lach-roll must have begun on the highest note that the Canary is capable of producing, and have descended to the deepest level of the knorre (knurre)! This tour was described to me by Erntges as beginning high on the notes "hi, hi, hi," dropping through "hi-ha-ho" to "hu," similar to the following:—

In explanation, so to speak, of the lach-roll, Erntges related the following story to me from memory:—

"The veteran Maybach was, in spite of his advanced age, a passionate admirer of the song of exquisite Canaries, and it happened that, although he resided a considerable distance from Elberfeld, he always kept up an active intercourse with fanciers in this town, especially with me. One day Mr. Maybach's son came to me with the intention of purchasing another good Canary for the old man as a birthday surprise, which event took place the following day. I had at the time some excellent lach Rollers, which tour old Mr. Maybach did not yet possess amongst his stock, and evidently had not yet heard, as it had only recently been introduced into Elberfeld.

I parted with one of these lach-rollers to young Mr. Maybach, who secretly placed it in a cage hanging in the sitting room in which his father's favourite songster had hitherto been kept. On the next day (his birthday) the old man was sitting with his son imbibing his morning coffee, when the bird commenced its delightful song, so that the old man, who until then had no idea of the present, and was just raising the cup to his lips, sat fixed with surprise and listened. When, however, the song passed to the lach roll and dropped step by step, finally to die away, the old man spilt the whole cup of coffee down his waistcoat with joyous astonishment. He immediately ordered his horse to be saddled, and hastened in a gallop to me, to thank me for the sacrifice I had made in parting with the bird."

When, in 1887, I visited Erntges (with whom I was united in true friendship until his death) and sojourned a week with him, the lach roll evidently no longer existed. But from Erntges' description of this tour, I gained the conviction that this sea-serpent (the lach roll) was nothing else than a beautifully-performed hollow-roll, which, beginning on the highest note as a hollow-bell, descended in large bends to the deepest note. It was called by some "lach" roll, by others "wieher" (neighing) roll, "hengst" (stallion) roll, or "heul' (moaning) roll, the latter derived from the moaning of the storm. I expressed my opinion to Erntges, who admitted that one might well reckon the lach-roll, and all its off-shoots with the hollow roll. Accordingly the lach-roll is by no means extinct, but when we hear a delightful schockel-hollow roll delivered in long bends in slow measure, we have before us a lach roll, a wieher roll, a hengst and heul roll of the good old times. That we no longer have such tours is merely due to the fact that we have become more realistic, for actually all such tours are still present to-day as they were then.

As with the lach roll, so it is with other "extinct" tours; Brandner specially mentions as such a "trill" roll and a "zither" roll. I shall revert later to this subject.

The hollow schnatter belongs to those tours which easily deteriorate in the progeny. I have only heard it in the birds of Erntges and a few other prominent breeders. With the best Erntges songsters it undoubtedly belongs to the brilliant parts of the song. Its notes are, "sü, sü, sü," and "sö, sö, sö."

Breeding Foreign Birds in Cages.

An Easy Method Explained.

By Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S.

The list could easily be made more extensive; in fact, all the genus Serinus (a large one) would be probable breeders under the conditions indicated above. But those mentioned are sufficient for our purpose. It must be understood that only one pair should be kept in each cage; if two pairs are kept together success will be very improbable.

Hybrid breeding possesses a great fascination for many bird-keepers, and they certainly are not shut off from pursuing this hobby in the case of foreign species. To attain success in this the same type cage, furnishings, etc., would be required as have already been described.

The following hybrids have either been produced or are those with which success is most likely to be attained:—Grey and Green Singing Finches; Ribbon and Red-headed Finches; Bengalese and Spice Finch; Striated and Sharp-tailed Finches; Bronze and Magpie Mannikins; Parson Finch and Bengalese; Golden-breasted Waxbill and Avadavat; St. Helena and Grey Waxbills; Bicheno and Zebra Finches; Indian and African Silverbills; Chestnut Finch and Silverbill; and Cuban Finch and Olive Finch.

All the following foreign species would be likely to cross with the domestic Canary, preferably some small robust variety (the hen bird should be the Canary):—Alario Finch; Grey Singing Finch; Green Singing Finch; St. Helena Seedeater; Saffron Finch; Hooded Siskin; Black-headed Siskin; Cape Canary; Sulphury Seedeater; Pelzeln's Saffron Finch; and all the genus Serinus or Chrysomitris.

Thus it will be seen that there is plenty of scope for the persistent and persevering keeper of foreign species to extend his hobby in almost any direction in which his fancy leads him. But like the breeder of British species and their hybrids he must not be discouraged by failure, but by a study of "cause and effect" make these failures stepping stones to future success.

All the species named in this paper can be dealt with as a whole. Two mixtures should be given. Staple: Canary and white millet seed in equal parts, and a millet spray hanging in the cage. Occasional: One part each red millet, Indian millet, maw, paddy rice, hemp, crushed oats, rape and teazle. Greenfood: Fresh tender lettuce, especially for the winter season, flowering (seeding) grass, groundsel heads, chickweed in seed; also sprouting canary, which readily grows in ordinary garden soil without trouble, and should be given to the birds as soon as the seed is seen to be fairly plump in the ear. Greenfood should not be given when bitten by frost, or when sodden with rain or dew.

In addition to the above, cuttlebone, grit (not sand), and water, ad lib., for drinking and bathing must be supplied.

The above named foods will suffice to keep all the species named in this paper fit and in good feather, but the thoughtful bird-keeper will see also that his birds get some luxuries in addition, when the glossy, silken plumage of the occupants of his cages will amply repay him

What are luxuries? To most species of foreigers they are small insect life; blighty sprays and foliage from any non-poisonous plant or herbage; small flies; small spiders; smooth green caterpillars; small beetles; live ants' cocoons (eggs); and such-like. These will keep them contented and happy, and will greatly assist to bring them into breeding condition; they will also prove an important factor in the successful rearing of the young with some species.

The Rearing of Young Foreigners.

I have already referred to the importance of supplying some live insect-food. If you have no garden, such foods as live ants' eggs, gentles, wasp grubs, etc., are usually to be obtained, according to the season, from our advertisers; but very many insects can be captured (trapped) even in a backyard.

A PEEP INTO THE FUTURE (?)

The trend of modern millinery, as foreseen by our artist, Mr. T. Aitken.

Greenfood is another important item. This must be supplied liberally twice daily. The kinds have already been dealt with, and need not be referred to again. Soft-food is indispensable in the case of many species while rearing young; and though for those who only keep a few birds it is cheapest to buy a ready-made mixture from some reputable firm, those preferring to mix their own will find that the following will answer their purpose fully:—1lb. ants' eggs (good), ½lb. dried flies, 1lb. biscuit meal (crushed plain biscuit will do). The above, when well mixed, will keep indefinitely in any dry place. It should be covered up to keep it free from dust, etc. For use take the required portion, and make it crumbly moist with boiling water. Then stir in an equal bulk of crumbled sponge cake and supply to the birds.

Concluding Hints.

All that remains now is for the bird-keeper, or prospective bird-keeper, to procure his cages and birds, and to adapt the general directions outlined above to his own particular case. I should add that with birds in cages strict cleanliness is necessary, and that an abundance of fresh air without draught is essential for the bird-room. A keen eye must be kept on all stock, and their demeanour and condition noted daily. Constipation should be at once checked by the giving of a mild laxative, and a bird out of tone will generally be benefited first by a mild laxative, and then by a course of chemical food or byno-phosphates.

In the nesting season a pail of old mortar rubbish should be kept at hand, and a little scattered over each sand tray. This will save many cases of egg binding. Above all, at this season, see that the birds do not get a chill by draught; but at the same time the atmosphere of the birdroom should never be stuffy.

As a last word I would say keep all new purchases in strict quarantine for a month at least—six weeks would be better—and only introduce them amongst your established stock when you are assured they are fit. Again, never use your permanent cages for quarantine purpose, and never store or leave (even temporarily) your quarantine cages in the bird-room.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Bad Breeding Results.

J. Liddle.—There are two chief factors which have contributed largely to the failure of your attempts to breed Canaries in a flight. First, your feeding is not wholly conducive to success, and, secondly, you have the flight too much overcrowded for a successful result to be obtained. And, again, I think your cleaning and scrubbing operations calculated to do far more harm than good, as this constant disturbance is certainly prejudicial to success. Do not conclude from this last remark that I advise neglect or uncleanliness, but there is a reasonable limit to this, and it is not reasonable in such circumstances to sweep the flight out three times a week, and properly scrub it out once a week, by which latter term I take it you mean scouring it with water, etc. If the latter is correct, it is just possible the swollen feet may be gouty or rheumatic symptoms, though I am rather inclined to the theory of accident or injury as the real cause. To have a fair chance of success, you should not have had more than nine hen and three cock Canaries in the flight, about a dozen nesting sites, and no other birds at all. In addition to Canary seed, you should have supplied summer rape regularly in a separate vessel, and given a little mixed seed about twice a week, and egg food three times a week before hens had laid their clutches, none after they began to sit, and a daily supply when young were in the nests. The bread and milk was quite superfluous. Under the above regime you might succeed next season, but you would undoubtedly be better advised to put up the birds in pairs in cages, and reserve the flight to transfer the young to when able to leave their parents. For general details of management, you should get "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d., post free, or take up the parts of "Our Canaries." Dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda, the size of a small pea, in each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water every second day for a week. The sample of Canary seed is an excellent quality.

Acknowledgment (Mrs. C.).—Thanks; glad to have been of help.

Improvement (E.C.).—Thanks. Glad you already find an improvement. Hope birds will now go on quite well.

Effect of Foods (G. Barker).—Truly, G.B., you must be a "rara avis" to have read CAGE BIRDS many years and never learnt much from it, and also kept Canaries over twenty years and yet know little about them. I'm afraid you are not a very attentive student, as so many others tell a different tale at least as regards the first item. Your query is really too vague to deal with properly in the limits of these columns, as it would require a detailed account of all foods, for most, or all, birds, in all circumstances. Generally speaking, in ordinary circumstances with caged Canaries canary keeps the bowels moderately free; hemp, rape, millet, maw, are more constipating; linseed, inga, black rape, and new summer rape are all more or less relaxing. Try the following treatment for the hen:—Staple diet, three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day a pinch of good hemp and a morsel of banana, and on the alternate days a third of a teaspoonful of maw, and a pinch of crushed plain dry unsweetened biscuit. No green food at all. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for three consecutive days, and every second day for a week afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid. If this is not quite what you want to know, write again at end of above treatment, and give more definite particulars of your requirements. Shall be pleased to be of assistance.

Toes Absent (Hoppy).—I do not think you would be likely to give any material assistance to the bird which left the nest with no toes on the one leg by trying to fix any appliance to the leg, and, on the other hand, you might easily cause it much pain and discomfort. Having never known the use of toes on the one foot, and having serviceable ones on the other, it will soon get almost as clever, if left quite alone, as a bird with two perfect feet. Give it perches with an oval-shaped upper surface, and of such a size as the perfect foot can get a thorough and comfortable grip, and rub across them—not around them—occasionally with very rough sandpaper to prevent them getting quite smooth. This is all I think you need do.

Losing Feathers (Mrs. Crosland).—Your first letter had already been attended to when the second arrived. The advice given in previous reply will be equally applicable in this case, but in case it was not mentioned before, you may give a morsel of bread and milk, slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur for the first two days, and dissolve in the drinking vessel as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence, and half as much chlorate of potash for two days, and then go on and treat as advised in last reply. Stop using oil on them. You might watch the birds, especially if caged together, to see whether they pluck out their own, or each other's feather.

Yorkshire Ill (F.M.).—It is not unlikely it may be the coming moult that is affecting it badly. See that cage is quite free from red mites, and throw a light cover over it for a time to see if the bird begins to cast feathers. Keep it out of the direct sunshine, but in a bright, airy, and healthy place, and not a draughty one. Give a staple diet of plain Canary seed only, and in addition give half a teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days for a week give a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and sprinkled with soft sugar. Three times a week give a quarter teaspoonful of maw, and on each of the remaining days a little green food. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and on the alternate days 20 drops of whiskey and a few blades of saffron. In the following week give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid, every second day.

Roller and Rings (Llanelly).—(1) The Roller is simply going into an early moult. As he seems quite healthy there is no need for any special treatment, beyond taking ordinary care to protect him from chills and serious fluctuations of temperature if the weather becomes unfavourable. Keep him in a bright, well-aired place; allow him to bathe freely, and if you want him to get over the moult quickly for tutoring young, throw a light cover over the cage for two or three weeks. You may give a morsel of bread and milk with a pinch of maw three times a week for a month, and afterwards a pinch of linseed three times a week and 20 drops of Chemical Food in the water about as often for the remainder of the moulting period. (2) I can only suggest that you probably press the rings somewhat out of shape in putting them on, so that they pinch the legs more or less, and thus cause swelling and inflammation. You also put them on much too early, as when using open rings there is no necessity to put them on until a day or two before the birds seem likely to leave the nest. Try the method of trimming a bit of stick to a slightly larger thickness than an adult bird's leg, then bend the ring round this to put it in good shape; open the flanges with the thumb-nail just enough to allow ring to drop off easily, then put on leg, and gently bring flanges together again, taking care not to pinch ring out of shape again.

Crest Gone Thick (T. Yalden).—It is very probable the Crest is about going into moult. If he has no young dependent upon him, put him in a cage by himself for moulting. For the next fortnight give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on the alternating days a third of a teaspoonful of maw. Give a spray of green food daily. Limit the dietary to this. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of buckthorn and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and in the next week give 20 drops of whiskey and six of tincture of gentian every second day. See Mr. Weston's replies re Bullfinch query, which should have been on a separate sheet to get to him.

About Norwich (Invicta). — (1) The reason the young Norwich have not moulted is because the moulting season was too far off. We are only now just at the beginning of it, and I think you may reasonably expect these birds to start moulting any time from the middle to the end of this month. As you have been giving colour-food so long it will be quite sufficient to give them a little only twice a week until they start to cast feathers, when, of course, you must begin to give it regular again every day until the moult is quite finished. (2) Certainly you would be quite justified in showing a Norwich with a wholly black tail and otherwise quite clear. The tail may perhaps tell against him somewhat in keen competition, but if he is as good as you say in Norwich characteristics he should always have a good fighting chance. If he comes of a good marked strain you should mate him next season with a good eye-marked bird, also of an even-marked strain.

Egg Bread with Honey (J.T.R.).—Sorry I have no special recipe for making egg-bread with honey by me, neither have I any particular liking for these fantastic foods. For all practical purposes you will find nothing so useful and reliable as a good plain wholesome food. Still, if you wish to try it, I would suggest that you get a cake made according to one or other of the recipes for egg-cake which you would find in "Our Canaries," and omit a third part of the sugar and add the equivalent proportion of honey. I should say the best way to add the honey would be to dissolve in the milk or water used for mixing the dough. Or, for experiment, which will cost very little, get the feminine powers to make you a trial cake from the following recipe. One fowl's egg, well beaten, one ounce honey, one ounce castor sugar, two ounces flour. Add a few drops of milk to honey to make it run more easily, and then gradually add both honey and sugar to the egg whilst beating it. Bake in a moderate oven, and store in a cool dry place for a week before using.

To Exterminate Red Mite (T.B.).—A most efficient plan now with a cage that is badly infested is to remove the bird to a temporary cage, giving it a bath daily in which a little quassia extract has been mixed, until ready to go back to its permanent cage, and clean out the cage, and then, in the open air, well paint it all over inside and out with petrol, using a small brush, and well flushing all the joints and crevices. Allow it to remain in the open air, and repeat the process in a few hours, and again the next day. Then when it is quite dry, and the odour has passed off, give it a wash with a little soap-suds in which a teaspoonful of carbolic fluid has been mixed, and when again quite dry polish up and return the bird. Do not forget to do all perches, sand-tray, seed-box, etc., simultaneously, and also examine well the wall and nail on which the cage has been hanging, lest there should be colonies of mites lurking thereon ready to re-infest the cleaned cage.

Dropping Wing (Mrs. E. C.).—I do not think there is really anything seriously wrong with the wing. As it seems to have occurred just after feeding time, it is not unlikely it might have been in a little quarrelling, as to who, or which, took first place at the feeding or water vessels, or it might even have been taking a slight splash in the water, and was drying itself when noticed. If the effect has not passed off already, put the bird in a moderately small cage, with only one perch placed low down, food and water vessels quite easily accessible, and if the bird is at all wild or flutters about unnecessarily, throw a light cover over the cage in order to keep it as quiet as possible, and keep it under these conditions until the wing seems to be quite recovered. Do not attempt any mechanical interference of any kind at all. Aim at making the bird rest the wing completely for a time, and leave the rest to Nature.

A Bad Lot (Ellis).—As you give me absolutely no particulars about your treatment, I can only say that if this is tolerably fair you must have been very unfortunate in getting a thoroughly bad lot of feeding hens. But for all the hens to refuse to feed in this way seems very suggestive of something being wrong with their management. It is too late now to hope to retrieve such bad fortune this season, and if these hens are not quite young I would clear them out and start afresh with a new crew next season. In the meantime you cannot do better than read and digest "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our manager would send you post free for 7d., or get the parts of "Our Canaries," which deal with all these points in the fullest detail. Then next year you might hope for more success. If you have any young now to hatch out, look up the last two or three issues in which you will find several replies for dealing with cases of hens not feeding.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

Parrot Breathing Heavily.

K. Gearing.—I can help you but little till you give more details. I must recognise what species it is—give some idea of size, has it a long or short tail, and fuller details as to colouration. How are you treating it and feeding it? In the meantime give a dose of Dinneford's magnesia—two parts water, one part magnesia—this is to form the drinking water for one day, repeat the dose after an interval of two days. Of course, there may be some internal trouble in which case I fear nothing can be done. Examine its mouth and throat, and if there are any signs of inflammation or ulceration get a hox of honey and borax from your chemist, and with a camel hair brush anoint as well as you can the affected parts twice daily. Supply the information asked for above and I will reply at once.

An Ailing Amazon.

J. Bird.—I should advise keeping the water in cage continually, or at any rate offer it twice daily and let it satisfy its thirst on each occasion. I should also advise about one tablespoonful of boiled maize every other day, it must be prepared fresh for each occasion, as it soon turns sour. The bread and milk should only be temporary, or it will end by aggravating the trouble. There must be a cause, something in its seed, or getting hold of something which upsets its digestion. As the bird is so small a drinker, in case of similar troubles, or whenever the voidings appear unduly hard, give water and Dinneford's magnesia in equal parts, as drinking water till relief is given. To keep up a varied diet, ripe fruit (ad-lib), leaf of lettuce (occasional), nuts, dry boiled potato, plain biscuit, green peas and stale crust of household bread. Cuttlebone should always be accessible to the bird and a pinch of grit (not sand) added to the daily supply of seed. If the bird will eat the boiled maize, ten to twenty drops of Hypo-phosphates may be stirred into it, after all water has been drained away. As a remedy the brandy and milk was permissible while the exhaustion lasted. In case of similar violent attacks, independent of the other remedies give 3 or 4 drops of tincture of opium, dissolved in a little syrup, three or four doses may be given, at intervals of six or seven hours, which should soon check the trouble. The only way to definitely ascertain cause, would be to send to our post mortem expert voidings and vomitings for examination..

Breeding Ribbon Finches.

R. D. S.—Very recently an article appeared from my pen in our pages on "Breeding Foreign Birds in Cages," and a diagram was given of a suitable cage—they certainly need some privacy and this the ordinary breeding cage does not give—look this article up, Ribbon Finches even in aviaries often act as yours do, and if the cock continues to eat the eggs, set him free to take his chance and procure another. I do not think the hen would incubate if her mate was removed, though after the young are hatched, she would bring them up alone if he were removed out of sight and hearing. This has taken place more than once in my aviary when something has happened to the cock. Diet: dried ants' eggs as bought, canary, white and spray millet, greenfood and when they are rearing young some good insectile (soft food) mixture—the supply of greenfood should be unlimited. If the eggs are again eaten remove the cocoanut shell and put in a Hartz travelling cage, cut away two of the bars for entrance, remove the fittings, put in a little hay and hang it up in the most retired corner of the cage. Leave some hay in the cage. The change of nest may cause more stability. I do not think removing the eggs will help; it will probably aggravate the trouble. The birds do not require heat; let them have light and air without draught. They will do better—at any rate up to the end of October—in a room without any artificial heat at all.

What Bird? (Curious).—It appears to me that you have a young Pennant's Parrakeet, or a hybrid between that species and some other Broadtail. However, your description comes so close that I have little doubt but what it is correctly named as above, and that at the next moult the minor discrepancies will disappear. Value about 25s. to 30s. at present.

Breeding Orange-cheek Waxbills (Je ne suis pas). —I can add but little to the booklet and my former reply. Orange-cheeks have so far proved "canny creatures" in the breeding line, and so far there are but few records of them having been bred in captivity. Let your breeding cage be as roomy as possible, and there should be some kind of privacy provided by a small screen in front of one end of cage, or some similar arrangement. Put the birds in the cage at once, hang up a coconut shell nest, also a small rush one, and screen both with a twiggy branch or heather spray. Supply a little hay, and leave the birds to themselves. The birds will do well enough on millet and greenfood. Spray millet is very good for them, and every Waxbill I have ever possessed has eaten it greedily.

Is it a Silverbill (W. W. D.).—Your bird is undoubtedly a Silverbill, at least, that is my opinion—probably a young bird. The hen differs very little from the cock in plumage; it may be said to be similar, but duller, but even this difference is not great. It may possibly be a hybrid between the two species, African and Indian—they interbreed freely. While I do not think a cross between the Silverbill and Cutthroat has been reared, there is no reason why the eggs should prove continuously infertile, unless your bird is a hybrid; but I opine before the year is out young will be reared. If at the next moult your bird's plumage should alter in colour at all, kindly send me a description.

An Ailing Blue-front (K. G.).—You must stop the bread and milk; this is working the mischief. Give it a little boiled maize daily, boil till soft, drain away all water, and lightly dust with flowers of sulphur and supply to the bird. It soon turns sour, and must be prepared fresh daily. The other items of diet you name are satisfactory—add a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply of seed mixture, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone hanging in the cage. Give every fourth day so long as the voidings are not watery-loose, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intermediate days well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. In other respect treat as per our previous reply.

An Ailing Parrot (J. B.).—Yes, you interpret my instructions correctly, but you must not pour half a teaspoonful down at once, or the bird will be almost choking. Give about a third, and when the bird has swallowed that, another third, and so on till it has taken the whole. Or you can stir four drops into the daily supply of drinking water; you must use a crock drinker, and the water must be stirred several times during the day. Also you can give it direct to the beak (three drops) from a quill—give, say, one dose early morning, another about 4 p.m., and another about noon of the next day. Allow three or four days to elapse, and then if needful repeat the treatment. As regards seed, most Parrots eat sunflower first, but so long as seed remains in the tin only replenish daily, any unfouled leaving can be supplied again after the husks have been blown away.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Robin and Canary (Barber, Ferndale).—I know of no instance of a Robin having been successfully mated with a hen Canary, and certainly never expect to see a Hybrid of this cross.

For Floor of Cage (Stonechat).—I know of nothing so good as malt-coomb (or malt-culm), which is obtainable cheaply from maltsters, as a covering for the floor of the cages of insectivorous birds. If you cannot obtain this, use granulated (very fine) peat-moss litter (may be bought at large poultry-food, etc., stores, or hay and corn dealers). Put a thick covering on the floor. Yes; feed your Stonechat as you would a Redstart. It is a delicate species, and needs careful attention and the best of food.

All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

"Off Its Legs" (F. B. T.).—Give the bird its water in a tall glass or earthenware vessel (firmly secured) so that it cannot bathe in it (the water), and in each 3 tablespoonfuls stir a teaspoonful of compound syrup of hypo-phosphates B.P. (Fellow's Syrup). Get one ounce of this tonic from a good-class chemist. Give every day (fresh) for five days, then every other day (plain water in between) over a period of a fortnight. Provide some flesh food (this is very important); freshly-killed mice and Sparrows are best. A raw egg would be appreciated, too, no doubt. Jays must have flesh food of some kind or other frequently.

Value of Hybrid (E. O. C.).—Fifty shillings (or thereabouts) if a good show specimen; about twenty shillings if otherwise. It must be a cock, of course; hens have very little value.

Bullfinch Eggs (L. Yalden)—I should say that probably the eggs of the hen Bullie will be fertile, seeing that her mate was a cock Bullie. The hen Canary should have the usual food-stuffs, but seeding shepherd's-purse and chick-weed very liberally. Give her some good hemp and sunflower seeds, too, cracked.

Identity of Bird (D. Wallice).—1, Your bird is a Snow Bunting sure enough (a drawing of one appeared recently on our front page), but from your description I fear it is a hen (the duller, dirtier coloration is a sexual characteristic). 2, If a hen it will always be the same "dirty" colour. 3, Yes; it would go into a class headed "Lark or smaller," providing, of course, there was no class for Buntings, or one headed "A.O.V. Finch" (or "Finch and Bunting"), or "A.O.V. Seed-eater" (or "Hardbill"). All schedules are not worded alike, as doubtless you know. If there was a suitable hen class, the bird would have to be entered therein (assuming my guess at its sex to be accurate).

Hybrid Matters (Anxious).—Yours is a highly interesting list of couples; I hope some of the uncommon pairs will bring you luck. I have never heard of the Mealy Redpoll mating successfully with a hen Siskin. It may have done so in years gone by, however; of recent years (until last season) Mealy Redpolls have been hard to obtain. Am glad to hear you succeeded. Pity you left the eggs with the couple. It usually happens that they get smashed; or the youngsters killed if any hatch. The Canary hen will need no special food (note reply given to Yalden this week).

"Too Proud to Sing" (J. B.).—Your question beats me. I find that the "prouder" a bird is, the more strenuously he sings. High condition usually means plenty of song. Are you sure that you are accurately diagnosing the trouble? Have you tried a mild dose of saline medicine (such as sulphate of soda, or Epsom salts) in the water for a few days? Say as much as will just cover a sixpenny-piece.

Chaffinch when Moulting.

T. Fryer.—During the moult I should advise you to make the stock mixture canary three parts, and teazle, summer rape, and linseed one part each. Allow a little hemp once a week, and a few sunflower seeds (say a teaspoonful) daily, except when giving the hemp, also the same quantity of a good wild seed mixture. You will find much of the latter wasted, but whatever the bird picks out will do him good, and it is very cheap. With regard to live ants' eggs, these should certainly be given, if obtainable, but mixed amongst a little of a high-grade insectile food; with this commence to stir in a small pinch of a reliable brand of tasteless pepper, gradually increasing the quantity. A good teaspoonful of this combined colour and soft food daily will be quite sufficient, and ensure your bird coming through a fine colour (if naturally good in this respect), and carrying the much-desired "bloom." Give a little of the usual seeding green foods, and (above all) allow the bird to bathe freely, or spray him on suitable days. The strength of the colour food need not exceed one in six; this should be considered "full strength."

Feeding a Goldfinch.

Miss E. Young.—Let the stock food be good, sound teazle, three parts, hemp, two parts (make sure this is good), Canary two parts, and linseed one part. In a separate dish give a dessert spoonful of cracked sunflower seed occasionally, with a good pinch of maw and niger seeds now and again, as a further change. A little wild seed mixture is also excellent. The bird should have (when obtainable) a free daily supply of knapweed, thistle heads (especially any with tiny maggots at the centre), milk, thistle, seeding chickweed, groundsel, and shepherd's purse (not the coarse leaves), any cornflower heads which you can get full of seed—all, or any, of these are liked by the Goldie, when in season, and help to get him through his moult in exhibition form. Many like a tiny white mealworm (just cast its skin) now and again. He should have provision for a bath whenever he feels inclined to take it. That he should bathe freely is very important. When a bird is not thoroughly on seed run his stock mixture through a hemp mill before offering it to him. This will lightly crack it. Failing a mill, run the domestic rolling-pin (or a jam jar) over it. Don't colour-feed the bird.

Feeding a Linnet.

A. Walton.—Let the Linnets' stock mixture be: Canary and teazle three pints each, summer rape, and linseed one pint each, charlock half-a-pint. In the winter (if the birds are in a cold room) about one pint of hemp should be added to the stock mixture (or, better still, a little be given daily in separate vessel). A feed of maw and niger, and a good wild seed mixture can be given frequently (varied) by way of a change. Let them have a little green food, especially rape seedlings, in the winter, and flowering dandelion tops and the young leaves, also seeding shepherd's purse, chickweed, plantain, and groundsel freely when obtainable. To bring them in condition for song, etc., the great "secret" is to give them a daily supply of the best old hemp, and crack it lightly, so that they feed well on it. Also put in the "tit-bit" drawer daily, a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Two ounces each of gold of pleasure, niger, plantain, sesame, and thistle, one ounce each of mustard (the golden-yellow seed), dandelion, maw, cornflower, and lettuce. The "Nutshell" booklet upon the Linnet would be very helpful to you, and tell you about the moulting, etc.

Linnet Mules when Young.

Knocker-up.—The best and safest rule is never to remove young Mules entirely so long as they "call" to be fed; before that stage is reached, however, they will be picking up food—partially supporting themselves, so to speak. I give green food (seeding shepherd's-purse) all the time; it is one of the first things the young Mules get on to. But lettuce, watercress, etc. (non-seeding kinds) I avoid when the young birds are commencing to feed. Have often given my methods of feeding (see recent issues). Cracked seed they must have for a time, and some soft food. When well on food a good seed mixture would be: Canary three parts, teazle two parts, hemp one part, summer rape, half-part, maw and linseed quarter-part each. In the hot weather reduce the hemp and linseed and increase the teazle. Any of the special Finch or wild seed mixtures advertised in our columns will make a good and acceptable change, given twice or so a week. A little sunflower seed twice or thrice a week would also be sure to be appreciated; crack it, if necessary. Any of the usual green foods may be given—chickweed, shepherd's-purse, flowering groundsel (not coarse leaves), dandelion, lettuce, watercress, etc. The two first-mentioned may be given practically ad libitum. All Mules are very fond of shepherd's-purse and chickweed.

"Meating Off" Small Softbills.

West Country.—I do not know that it is any more difficult to "meat off" small insectivorous birds in the autumn than in the spring. They are apt to break their plumage, of course, when the migratory instinct is upon them. The best way to "meat off" Nightingales, and other Softbills of about the same size, is by means of mealworms—the latter are widely obtainable, unlike certain other live foods. I presume you know that usually it is necessary to put the bird's cage in a light spot, and cover the cage front with muslin, or white gauze, or similar material, while he gets used to captivity. Also see that the food and water are easily accessible—right under its nose, as it were. Personally, I commence with a supply of not over large mealworms in the food dish; then give a few biggish ones cut in two, then lightly sprinkle these cut mealworms with a good insectile food, prepared with a generous admixture of finely-minced hard-boiled (fresh) egg; then I press the cut mealworms well up amongst the food. These are the stages; at the end the bird has become used to taking up some of the insectivorous food (especially particles of the egg), and I then gradually wean him off the mealworms, giving them occasionally only. I hope this brief description will make the process clear to you. It is troublesome while it lasts, and takes a week to fourteen days, according to the disposition of the bird, before it can be termed "well on food." And they need many scores of mealworms in that time. A few gentles are good, if obtainable, and well scoured, while live ants' eggs are splendid. You can give a little of both in addition to the mealworms. The cover over the cage can be gradually raised, as the bird becomes used to its new surroundings. Live ants' eggs are, of course, the ideal thing for newly taken small Softbills; but it is not every one who can obtain them readily.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

E. S. P.—Peritonitis, due to worms in the peritoneal cavity. That these had been in existence in this region a long while I have no doubt. It is not usual to find worms in this region in Canaries, but I have frequently found them in the Starling family, generally one or two only, and these quite large.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

Concerning Foods (G. Barker).—We have forwarded your query to our Canary specialist, Mr. St. John, and you will find an answer in his columns.

Red Mites (Sp. Miller).—Look in Mr. G. E. Weston's columns for answer to your questions.

An Aviary (C. Barker).—Shall be delighted to receive the photograph and description of your aviary.

Newspaper Cuttings (J. T. Pegg and others).—We are much obliged to you for sending the press cuttings.

Canaries' Eggs (W. A. C., Hull).—There is no regular business done in sittings of Canary eggs. Your best plan, we should think, would be to get a sitting locally (i.e., from a dealer, or a member of the local Cage Bird Society).

Linnets in Lanarkshire (Amateur).—The Goldfinch is protected all the year in Lanarkshire; Linnets and other Finches can be taken during the open season (i.e., from August to March).

A Talking Parrot (O. Bulmer).—It is really impossible to value a bird from a written description; further, a good deal depends upon one's customers, some willingly paying higher prices than others. Your Parrot would seem to be an accomplished talker, and so should fetch anything from £5 upwards.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Young Bird Show, held at Naish's Stores, July 5th. Judging by the number of members, as well as the exhibits, this society is making strong headway. The show is held a little late in the afternoon, making things a little difficult for judging, coming as it does between the two lights, but we understand the difficulty cannot easily be avoided. A more thorough lot of fanciers, from the secretary, chairman and treasurer to the youngest of the flock, it would be hard to find, and the reputation of Cardiff C.B.S. bids fair to maintain its past high character. Coming to the exhibits, the age told very much against some otherwise promising specimens, as the majority of the birds were not matured as we like to see them at young bird shows. This we understand was caused by several fanciers having had an early breeding season, and so having to fall back on later youngsters. In the Yorksbires, the Yellow which won 3 spls., including best Canary in Show, owned by Mr. Whetton, is deserving of special mention, being almost perfect in type and of lovely quality and colour. In Norwich, on the day's form, Mr. Hopson's saddle-marked in the novice section takes the lead, being very typical, and well balanced with good quality of feather. In time, however, Mr. Thomas' 1st Yellow, Mr. Maggs' 1st Buff, Mr. Slocombe's 1st Marked Yellow, Mr. Dallimore's 1st Marked Buff, or Mr. Chidgey's 1st novice Yellow may with a good moult turn the tables. In British and foreign, Mr. Thorne kept up his reputation, and Mr. Baker staged a very promising Redpoll. Mr. T. L. Castree judged.

YORKSHIRE C.B.S. OF IRELAND.

This society may be complimented on having brought their second annual Young Bird show to a successful issue. Added interest was provided by an additional cup very kindly presented by Mr. W. Hawkins, of Queenstown, for the best bird in show of the opposite sex to winner of the Rowan cup, also two club medals for runners-up of each cup. The 7th July, in the Central Hall, Westmorland Street, Mr. Sheridan, whose task it was to judge the respective classes, found a pretty even lot of birds. His experienced eye, however, seems to have given general satisfaction. The Yorks classes were much stronger than last year, but there was a falling off in Norwich entries. Considering the close proximity of the Royal visit to Dublin, the gate was a bumper.

CL. YELL. YORKS (5): 1 and the Hawkins silver cup, S. Stewart, grand long bird, fine flights and tail, none too steady; 2, C. Holley, smaller, very typical; 3, J. A Young Goldfinch Problem.

Sir,—Will some kind reader advise me whether young Goldfinches can be reared by their parents in a cage? I have no time to hand-rear them. What points am I to observe?

Four Years' Reader.

Is this a Record?

Sir,—I removed fourteen miles on the 17th of June, and put my birds together the same night—two pairs. Both hens laid on the 21st and 22nd, and laid no more than two eggs each. I kept the eggs until the 24th, thereby losing two days. I gave one hen the four eggs on the evening of the 24th, and they have hatched out on July 7th. I should like to know if this is a record—only 21 days from removing until the hatching of the young. J. Robinson.

A Canary with One Wing.

Sir,—As a reader of Cage Birds, I should like to relate my experiences to other readers, this being my first year of breeding. I started with one pair of Yorkshires and one pair of Norwich in an outdoor bird-room, putting my birds up on March 11th. The Yorkshire laid five eggs and hatched four, the Norwich six eggs and hatched four birds. Going to nest again on the 27th and 28th of April, the Yorkshire laid five eggs, rearing five birds; the Norwich five eggs, rearing four birds. They went to nest again on the 1st and 5th of June, the Yorkshire laying six eggs and rearing six birds. The Norwich had seven eggs and six birds, but all died after the fifth day through the hen sweating them, this being my only loss. I think this a very good start. The young birds are all doing well in a small flight. I should like to hear whether any reader has ever known of a bird with only one wing, as I have one out of my second nest of Norwich, and it is as lively as any, although it cannot fly. Thank you and all readers of Cage Birds for the information gained through it every week, as I have had nothing else to work upon. G. Poulton.

Midland Counties Yorks. C.C.

Sir,—As founder and chairman of the above, I appeal to all Midland Yorkshire fanciers to join, when there would be no reason why the Club should not be as great a power as the kindred societies, Y.C.C., Southern Y.C.C., etc. In the past the Club has been greatly hampered with constant changes in the secretaryship, but that office is now in exceptionally capable hands. The Club's funds exceed £5, due in great part to the generosity of that sterling fancier, Mr. P. V. Williams, of Market Drayton, and it is intended to put up for competition a silver cup value at least £5 in the champion section, to be won three times before becoming absolute property of the winner, and a cup value at least £2 to be won outright in the novice section, besides medals for the runners-up. The Club has at present under thirty paying members, and in Birmingham district alone there must be at least three times this amount of Yorkie fanciers. Now, fellow-fanciers, do come forward and help. By so doing you will greatly help yourselves, also your own societies, who will doubtless apply for M.C.Y.C.C. patronage, to the benefit of their show accounts. Entrance fee is only the nominal one of 1s., and annual subscription 2s. 6d. All further particulars can be obtained from Messrs. Beck and Andrews, hon. secs., Rookery Road, Handsworth, Birmingham. W. C. Wells.

P.S.—Will Midland societies please apply at once for patronage for coming season?

How I Feed My British Finches.

Plain Canary Seed Advocated.

Sir,—Being a reader of your most useful and interesting paper, Cage Birds, I would like to say a few words on feeding British Finches in confinement, also Canaries, having reared and shown both for a number of years. When first I started with Finches, I fed with mixed seed that you get from any seed shop. My birds did very well for a time; but, alas! my Goldfinches dropped off one by one; as for my Linnets, I could not keep one more than twelve months. I was at a loss to understand this. I then consulted an old bird fancier, J. H. Verral (no doubt your many readers have heard much of this great bird lover, who has now passed away). His first words were: "What can you expect if you feed on seed mixture? Feed on the best plain Canary seed, and you will have less trouble with your birds." Now, I was young and would not take an old man's advice. The thought of my birds living on one seed only did not seem good to me, so I continued the mixed seed with the same result, till at last I gave up birds disgusted, and vowed I would never keep another. A few years passed away, and the bird fever attacked me again. I soon got together a few British Finches, as my two aviaries were still empty in the garden. Again I tried the mixture, with the same result. It was then I took J.H.V.'s advice, and started off with plain Canary seed. My birds did not relish it at first, but I am now proud to say that I use nothing else as an all round food. Spanish Canary seed is the food in our old town; we cannot get this; we can get a good Barbary seed, which is well suited to all my birds. I have at the time of writing four very fine English cock Goldfinches. These birds I have had for two years, and they have had nothing but Canary. I have Mules from these birds in the nest at the time of writing. I also have two cock Linnets which have bred very freely this season with my Norwich hens. I have, too, Siskin, Bullfinch, Greenfinch, and Chaffinch, and they have nothing but the plain Canary all the year round. It is very seldom that I lose a bird. I wish to point out that the birds are kept better on a plain diet than so many mixtures. If a sick bird shows itself in my bird room I at once give one drop of castor oil (two drops will often mean sudden death), remove dry seed, and feed on German summer rape boiled five minutes and mixed with stale bread crumbs and yolk of egg. This very seldom fails. I have read with great interest in your valuable paper concerning "going light" in Linnets. This has been a great worry to me for some time, but of late I have tried, with good results, the following:—At the first signs of wasting, remove your bird into the open air, take away the dry seed, and feed on boiled rape (German) mixed with a small proportion of yolk of egg and one Osborne biscuit (fresh twice a day). Add one drop of turps to an ordinary drinking fountain filled with fresh rain water. Continue this for a time, and you will soon see your bird returning to its old self. I have at the time of writing a two-year-old Linnet which paired with a Canary; result, four good eggs. Then he went thin. I treated this bird as stated, and I am thankful to say he is on the road to recovery. But he will still have the open-air treatment night and day for some weeks to come. When purchasing fresh-caught birds I always pick young ones, getting them from the catchers myself. I feed for the first month on boiled rape (well dried), with a little crushed hemp. But as soon as I can I get them on plain Canary seed. They are then very little trouble to me. A large flight or aviary will do the rest till the breeding season comes around. I hope your young readers will give this a trial, and let me know through your valuable paper its results. British Bird.

Non Colour-fed Classes.

Sir,—After reading Mr. Wilmot's article in the last issue of Cage Birds, I quite endorse his remarks as to the non-colour-fed classes at our forthcoming shows. I know many fanciers around this neighbourhood that would give shows their support, but say, "What's the use of showing my birds?" for they cannot compete with the colour-fed birds. Now, every working man cannot afford or devote his time to colour-feeding. He goes out to work at six in the morning and does not return home again until six at night. So he has very little chance of attending to it. I have tried colour-feeding myself, but find that the birds wants more personal attention than the working man is able to give them. The result is that they come out patchy, which alone spoils them for the show bench. I would like to see more non-fed classes provided at our shows, say, an A.V. class, natural colour, which I really think would be well supported. I never colour-feed my birds, but show them in their natural colour when an opportunity affords. I often come off victorious. Still, at the same time, I try to improve the colour of them, and closely follow the recipes given in "Our Canaries" by that eminent judge, Mr. J. C. Barnes. Those who have not tried it, and like to do so, I can assure them they will be astonished at the result. Chas. Kelsey.

A Cock Bullfinch and His Adopted Family.

"A Champion Feeder."

Sir,—In October of last year I got a fine cock Bullfinch, newly caught, and kept him on to the spring with an old Canary hen. As they got on very well I thought I would try the "impossible hybrid," so got a large Norwich for him, and in the month of May they took up house. He fed the hen, helped to make the nest, and altogether was a most domesticated husband. I have had two nests of four eggs each, but no results (all clear). A week after I had taken the eggs away a friend brought me a nest with three young greenfinches, about a fortnight old, whose parents had been killed by cats. I put them in the nest-box, and thought the Canary hen might feed them, but, much to my surprise, it was Bullie who adopted them straight away, and he has now got them on the sticks without the assistance of the hen, as I took her out after a couple of days to mate with a Goldfinch. I thought to help him a little in the feeding, but he was most indignant, and did everything but swear (if I understand bird language, he did that too). He nipped my hand, and took all the food out as fast as I put it in, so I left him to it, and he has proved a champion feeder. Several of the local fanciers have been in to see him, and have been delighted with the attention he pays to his adopted family. I intend to put him back with his mate, and I hope after his experience of family cares I may have fertile eggs next season. I omitted to say he has been all the time in an ordinary breeding cage at my business premises.

Bullie (Dumfries).

SPECIAL NOTICE TO SECRETARIES, &c.

"Cage Birds" goes to press on Wednesday during the summer months, therefore club notices, reports, etc., should reach us on Tuesday to secure publication in our issue of the same week. Will society officials kindly make a note of this?

Sexing Young Birds when in the Nest.

Sir,—I do not know whether it may be generally known, but seeing from time to time inquiries made by your readers as to how they can ascertain the sex of birds, it occurs to me you would like to know of a method which an old Aberystwyth cobbler swore by as being the nearest and (indeed, invariably the) surest. Well, here it is! When the young are a week old in the nest take the nest pan out of the breeding cage, examine the head of each youngster very minutely, and a certain characteristic will be noticed. Every cock bird will possess larger aural apertures ("ear-holes") than the hens. Safe odds, too, you can bet on this simple hint.

Welshman.

A Curious Rearing Exploit.

Sir,—I thought the following might be of some interest to readers. Being anxious to breed a Goldfinch Mule, I put a variegated Yorkshire hen (last year's bird) with a Goldfinch. She laid two eggs, and after she had spent half her time sitting, I decided to examine them. I found them light, so I removed them and the nest. In about a week's time a lad brought me two young Brown Linnets from the nest to see if I could do anything with them. After the best part of two days trying to hand-feed them (I failed to induce them to take much food), I decided to put them in the cage with the above birds, and I found, to my surprise, the hen started to feed them. One succumbed, but the other is doing well, and is now feeding itself. I had a Linnet fancier looking at it to-day, and he tells me it is a cock and likely to make a nice bird. Is the above a common occurrence, or does it augur well for the hen being a good mother in the future? W. A. Prosser.

An Appeal for the Widow of a Blackburn Fancier.

Sir,—Will you please publish the following acknowledgment from Mrs. Johnson of the prize draw which we have conducted in her behalf?

Cook and Walsh.

[Copy.]

To the Blackburn Cage Bird Society.

Gentlemen,—I desire to express to you my sincere thanks for the great help you have rendered me in arranging the prize draw for my benefit. To raise such a handsome sum for me (£34) must have entailed a great amount of time and labour, and I am deeply grateful for your kindness. The money, I need scarcely say, will be of great assistance to me in the task of bringing up my family, and I am further comforted by the thought that I am sure I may also look on your kindly action as an expression of respect for my late husband, who was a member of your society. I shall be obliged if you will convey my gratitude also to those outside the society who have assisted in your effort. Gratefully yours,

M. E. Johnson.

My Experiences with the Norwich Plainhead.

Some Useful Hints.

Sir,—As one who started Canary breeding in the year 1900 with two cocks and four hens, I should like to relate my experiences for the benefit of novices. First of all, purchase your stock birds from a good, reliable fancier who will deal fair and reasonably with you. Pair a clear yellow cock to a marked buff hen, or a clear buff cock to a marked yellow hen. In pairing two buff birds together you gain size; in pairing two yellows together you lose size, though you gain colour. So, to keep your birds well balanced, you should pair a yellow and a buff together. Always remember to keep a heavy marked yellow, or a self-yellow Green bird or two, for stock birds, as they are valuable for colour producing. When pairing my birds up I always prefer to have size in the cock and type in the hen. I never pair two birds together which possess the same faults. I always strive to breed birds having large round heads; short, well filled-in neck; good full chests; nice short wings, meeting neatly together on the back, and not crossing over each other at the tips; short tails; short legs; and short, tight-fitting feather. I never make a practice of pairing my birds up until the 1st of April, mine being a cold room, where no heat at all is used. A fortnight before pairing up I give the cocks half a teaspoonful of egg food every other day, and on the days when I don't give the egg food I supply two young dandelion leaves, not giving the hens any until I pair them up. You will then get eggs in about a fortnight, and you can rely on their being fertile if your birds are healthy and vigorous. I use only moss by way of building material. I always put the birds in clean cages when I pair up. The cages are painted azure blue inside and are black varnished outside. They are 36 inches long by 15 inches by 11 inches. They are well washed with a tablespoonful of carbolic acid to a bucketful of water; this keeps the red mite down during the breeding season. When the hen lays I take the first two eggs away, placing them back on the morning when the third egg is laid. By doing this you get all your young hatched more nearly at once. I take the cock away when the fourth egg is laid, and I give the eggs and nest a good dusting with Keating's insect powder. I give a bath when the hen has been sitting a week; then another dusting, and yet another on the twelfth day. This method will keep your hen and her young free from red mite (you are troubled with them more in the breeding season, of course, than at any other time). When your young ones are hatched (which will be about the thirteenth or fourteenth day), boil an egg as hard as you can; chop it up fine, or, better still, put it through a sieve. This sieve you can make yourself with a piece of perforated zinc; this will answer as a seed-cleaner as well when it is tacked on to a wooden frame about 8ins. by 6ins. and 2ins. deep. Press the egg through this sieve. Next crush four Osborne biscuits, or, better still, four teaspoonfuls of Spratt's cod liver oil food (which I consider a grand food for rearing young birds on); this will want just moistening with water. Then give this fresh as often as you can daily, always remembering to keep your utensils perfectly clean, as they will otherwise soon smell and turn the food sour. Also give in small quantities fresh young dandelion leaves or lettuce; each of these you can grow in the smallest piece of ground. Always rear a nest of birds on what you commence with, as changing their diet very often scours them. Give your hen nothing but plain Canary seed whilst she is sitting, and when she is feeding add a little hemp seed. When your young ones are a week old supply a clean nest, giving it a good dusting with insect powder. Afterwards you must not touch them. You can then return your cock bird. But keep your eye on him to see if he feeds the young. There are, however, very few that won't do this. Put another nest pan in at this time. I use terra cotta nest pans hung up with wire hangers at each end of the cage, and allowed to rest against the perch to keep them from swinging. When your young birds leave the nest (which will be when they are about three weeks old) put your wire slide in. Breeding cages should always be fitted with these slides. Put your young ones one side, and your old ones the other. This method prevents plucking. Put them some egg food in a vessel at the far end of the cage, so that you will see when they are eating it. But take care not to leave it to get sour. When the young start feeding for themselves, crush some hemp seed for them until you get them on the hard seed. You can let them stop in the breeding cage until the hen has gone to nest again. The old birds will feed them through the wires while they are in the breeding cage. When your hen starts sitting again you must remove your young ones to a flight cage. Remember, the more room they have the better they will be. I never give the young ones any green food after they once leave the old ones—I give nothing except plain Canary seed and clean water once a day, well rinsing out the fountains. When I say rinsing, I don't simply mean washing with water, but put your finger inside and rub it well round; this is most important. When you have your second nest of young reared you will begin to know which are your best breeders and feeders, and which have bred you your best show specimens. And let me impress upon young beginners that those birds which have bred you the best birds you cannot do better than pair together the following year. Last, but not least, don't breed too late, as all young birds should be reared and be on seed by the end of July to allow your birds the chance of having a good moult, and you the chance of getting them ready for the show bench. Let me conclude by advising all young beginners to buy Cage Birds every week; from this paper they will gain valuable information. It has given me much help in my hobby, and hints which I have tried, tested, and found true. Ambition.

Was it a Bramblefinch-Canary Hybrid?

Sir,—I think I had a youngster almost hatch out of three eggs (two of which were clear) from a cock Bramblefinch and a yellow Norwich hen. They had been sat on for over a fortnight, and the egg, as I held it up to the light, looked three-parts full. But thinking it could be no good, I picked off a bit of the shell from the large end, and there was a live young one in it, which began to bleed. I put the egg back under the hen, but the young one never got out of the shell. I have had some eggs from the Chaffinch-Bramblefinch mating, but either no good or they disappear. Whether the Bramble has them or the hen Chaffinch I do not know. F. J. Weaire.

In the Courts.

A Conviction for Cruelty to Parrots.

Important Case at Canterbury.

A case involving one of the biggest firms of wild animal dealers in England, viz., Messrs. Cross, of Liverpool, who, it was mentioned by the solicitor for the defence, sold every animal and bird there was in existence, from an elephant to a Humming Bird, was heard at Canterbury Police Court on July 7.

The case was one brought by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals against Herbert Rogers, manager to Mr. Cross, of Liverpool, for cruelty to two Parrots. Mr. Polhill, of London, appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Arrowsmith, solicitor, of Canterbury, represented the defendant.

Mark Berry, St. Peter's Lane, Canterbury, stated (says the "Kentish Observer") that he was a licensed hawker. In May last he communicated with Mr. Cross and agreed to purchase two Grey Parrots. He was informed that they would be sent to him on May 29, and witness sent an order for 39s. 6d.; 36s. for the Parrots and 3s. 6d. for the cage. He sent his son to the Canterbury West Station at ten o'clock, but they had not arrived. He got the cage at a quarter to one, and he immediately opened the box. Witness then produced the box in which the birds arrived, and showed how it was done up, the paper over the box, tied round with string and wire, and sacking nailed to the box over the paper.

The Clerk (Mr. T. A. Bowen): Where were the air holes?—Witness: I did not see any.

Witness, continuing, said when he undid the box one of the Parrots was dead and the other was gasping for breath and died a few minutes after, the warm milk which he gave it being of no avail. In his opinion the birds died from suffocation. He did not think that the way in which they were sent was the proper one, and he should have expected them to die. He had ordered Parrots from the same firm previously, and every time they had been sent in a large wire cage, and that was what he paid the 3s. 6d. for. There was no water in the box, and only just a few pieces of maize. The Parrots were only eight or nine weeks old; they were not feathered, only having feathers on the wings and on the top of the head. Directly he received the birds he wrote to Mr. Cross. Then he went down to the station-master and showed him the box, and he said it was cruelty to send them like that. Witness received a letter in answer to the one he had sent, in which defendant stated that he had packed thousands of Parrots, and he considered he had packed these in a proper manner. It further said that the Parrots should have left Liverpool at 9.15 p.m., and should have arrived at 6.30 a.m. at Canterbury, and that if they did not arrive at that time witness should go to the railway company for damages. The birds left in good condition, and the cage should have arrived at the same time. In consequence of this letter witness made a complaint to the inspector of the R.S.P.C.A.

In cross-examination by Mr. Arrowsmith, witness said he had had some Parrots with pink breasts from Mr. Cross before, but never any Grey Parrots.—Mr. Arrowsmith: Do you know what price a Grey Parrot sells at?—Witness: As much as you can get. (Laughter.)—Do you know that I could not buy one for 18s.? That is a dealer's price, is it not?—Yes.—So you expect to take dealers' risks, don't you?—No, I don't.—How do you suggest that they should be packed?—Put in a wire cage, with a little paper round it, and with some water and food inside.—Do you think they would live long like that?—Yes.—They would not have lived in that cage for even a few hours. Have you ever given a Grey Parrot water?—I should have given it milk. I have never had a Grey Parrot.

Mr. Arrowsmith informed the Bench that a Cockatoo (which was the real name for the pink-breasted Parrots that witness had bought previously, and which he had received in a wire cage) was as hardy as possible, but Grey Parrots were very delicate birds, and had to be kept at a certain temperature or else they would quickly die. His case was that they were packed properly for Grey Parrots, not for Cockatoos.

Inspector Greenman, of the R.S.P.C.A., stated that Berry communicated with him on June 3, and he went with him to his house, where he saw the box with the sacking round it and nailed in one corner. He took it away, and it had been in his possession ever since.

G. W. Dunkin, a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, stated that he examined the box on June 4, and in his opinion it was not a proper way to pack live birds. He also made a post-mortem examination, but putrefication had gone too far, and he was unable to say what was the cause of death. But from the manner in which the box was packed he formed the opinion that death was due to suffocation.

J. Lucas, inspector of the R.S.P.C.A., stationed at Liverpool, stated that on June 8 he went to see Mr. Rogers, who is manager to Mr. Cross, and gave him full particulars of the complaint. He replied: "Well, I know how to pack Parrots, and they were packed perfectly. You know they were nestling birds, only nine weeks old, and they would have been in as much danger if they had had too much air as too little." He then proceeded to show witness how the box was packed under his own supervision, and said that there was air given through the canvas and paper.

Mr. Arrowsmith then addressed the Bench at considerable length, and called the defendant, H. E. Rogers, who stated that he had been manager to Mr. Cross for the last fifteen years. The firm of Cross had been established for over 100 years, and during that time they had never been convicted of cruelty to any animals whatever. On May 31 he personally superintended the packing of the two Grey Parrots for Mr. Berry. He then described the way in which the box was packed, showing that the sacking was put inside and the paper out, not in the opposite manner in which the witness Berry alleged that it was.

Mr. Hunt: Do you suggest that the box has been tampered with?—Witness: The box is not the same as it was when it left us.

Witness, continuing, said he put some boiled Indian corn (maize) in the box with the birds, but the corn always went hard after twenty-four hours. There was no water put in because the Parrots would die from dysentery if they drank it—the moisture that they needed was supplied in the boiled maize.

Witness having been cross-examined by Mr. Polhill, the Bench retired to consider their decision, and after an adjournment of several minutes announced that they had decided to convict. A fine of £1 was imposed, and the costs 18s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. veterinary surgeon's fee were ordered to be paid.

Can an Egg-eating Hen be Cured?

Sir,—Would any kind reader let me know through your valuable paper, Cage Birds, how to cure my hen Bullfinch from eating her eggs? Have tried eggs filled with mustard and pepper, but without success. She has laid and eaten two this year; also four last season.

Excelsior.

The Fancy in Ireland.

Sir,—I see by your last issue of Cage Birds that your correspondent, "One in the Know," would make a good improvement as corresponding secretary to some that are in office, as it does not take him long to give readers the latest news. In forty-eight hours he has it all ready for the press; but, like other correspondents he does not stick at a little slander. He says Mr. Connell is annoyed at him letting Cage Birds readers know that he moved a motion to expel members writing to the Press. I am not annoyed at anyone stating what I do or say, but it is for what I do not say or do. For his proof he now quotes Mr. South's letter. I have no doubt he finds Mr. South very useful, but Mr. S. could say, if he chose, that he has been told at the meetings by members that such a motion was never moved by anyone. But that would not serve their purpose. Now, readers, ask yourselves if I could move such a motion, after writing more than anyone else. It speaks for itself. I find Cage Birds too useful to try in any way to curtail its correspondence. It is slander and falsehoods I object to. I believe "One in the Know" was at the meeting, but had not the courage to make it known that he was the writer referred to. He goes on to ask what he will do with Mr. Connell's pound (£1). He knows that Mr. C. put the pound on the table at the meeting he refers to, and challenged the whole meeting to bring an accusation against him, and it remained on the table till the close of meeting. I cannot see that Mr. Boyd is under any obligation to give "One in the Know" his history; I know Mr. Boyd resigned membership honourably, a privilege "One in the Know" will not get if he will own his identity, for he will find that I will have the courage to move his expulsion, and he will find that I will get plenty of support to do so. Then he complains that there was no answer to Mr. S.'s question re Ligoniel members. Would he ask Mr. South's motive for asking that question? They are strangers to me, but if they are the type of one or two that are left, they would be better "lost than found." After this letter I retire from this correspondence, and treat "One in the Know" and his assistants with the contempt they deserve, but advise them to still keep hiding behind a nom-de-plume; or matters might not be well for them. "One in the Know's" letter this week, "Corresponding Secretary's" next week—do they think we are all blind? I don't hide behind "noms-de-plume," but sign myself, as I always have done,

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE

WILL YOU BECOME A VICE-PRESIDENT?

Our Free Booklets in Great Demand.

Notes by the Secretary.

There has been a large demand for the free books offered last week, and the offer may at any time be withdrawn. I have sufficient in reserve to supply all old members who have not yet applied for them, and these will be sent free on receipt of a penny stamp for postage. It must be clearly specified, when applying, which book is required; either "British Bird Culture" or "The Common Sense of Canary Culture." I have received many applications from non-members for copies of these free books. They are supplied to members only, and only one copy to each member. No other applications can be entertained.

Free Books for New Members.

I have still about five hundred of these, and a copy of either will be forwarded to the next five hundred members joining. When these are exhausted I may not be able to repeat the offer, so intending members should join at once to make certain of getting one of the above valuable pamphlets. They will be sent entirely free on receipt of the one-shilling for membership, and the sixpence, or one shilling, as the case may be, for a badge.

Our Badges.

The new badges, mounted in rolled-gold, have given very great satisfaction; they are in two forms, one as a brooch for cap front or coat-lapel, or for ladies' wear, and the other as a very pretty pendant for watch-chain. The price in either form is one shilling each if remittance is sent with the membership fee.

Those that are not mounted in rolled gold are priced at 6d. each, and are in three forms; as a brooch, a pendant for the watch-chain, or as a button for the coat-lapel. New members joining should distinctly specify which of the five forms they require, sending two shillings or eighteenpence accordingly; one shilling for membership for one year, and the balance for badge. Old members having the sixpenny badges may have them exchanged for those in rolled gold by returning their old badges together with seven penny stamps.

All Classes Affected.

I would commend to the notice of our well-to-do readers the letter of Major Champion published below. It is not only the working-classes who will be debarred from keeping birds if the sentimentalists get their way. The avowed object of these people is to abolish once for all the keeping of any bird, large or small, in captivity under any circumstances whatever, and this of course would affect all classes alike. The small subscription of one shilling a year may scarcely be expected to make Cage Birds League self-supporting, and those of our readers who are better favoured with this world's goods than the large majority of bird-keepers may well help the League in its objects by becoming Vice-Presidents of the organisation. The qualification as Vice-President is an annual subscription of not less than one guinea, and I should be very pleased to hear from any lady or gentleman who is prepared to support the objects of Cage Birds League in the manner indicated.

MORE VIEWS OF MEMBERS.

I beg to acknowledge receipt of rolled gold badge, which is very pretty indeed, and have pleasure in thanking you for your promptness. Wishing you all success in your earnest efforts.

Colne, Lancs. A. Wilkinson.

Pleased to see that you are issuing pamphlets explaining the objects of Cage Birds League. This is the best move of all, as there are scores of fanciers who do not know of the existence of Cage Birds League. So please send me on a few for distribution around this district.

A Hint to the Well-to-do.

In joining Cage Birds League, I do so hoping that the society may be the means of inducing the well-to-do to go in for keeping our British wild birds as pets and as a variety to the Java Sparrow and such-like foreign birds. How rare to see the Linnet, the Siskin, or the Greenfinch in the drawing-rooms of the well-to-do! True, the Bullfinch, and, in a lesser degree, the Goldfinch are to be plentifully found in such situations. If the wild bird becomes fashionable, the humanitarians will soon drop their persecution. It must be a matter of extreme gratification to all bird fanciers and dealers that her Majesty the Queen was graciously pleased to accept the present of a Norwich Canary. Wishing you every success in your efforts to form a strong society.

Sir,—I think I am about the first from here to join the Cage Birds League.. If they are waiting for some one to give them a start, here goes. I hope it will not be long before you get some more from this district, for I think it is time we were all in it. It has been open long enough.

It Rests with Fanciers.

Sir,—I wrote to you two weeks ago, saying that I did not quite understand the motives of Cage Birds League. Now I know better, and can see what power the League will have if all fanciers band themselves together in defence of their hobby. Before trying to do away with well-kept and well-fed caged birds, the faddists and sentimentalists would do better to try to exterminate or keep in order some of the cats that prowl about in back gardens and which I think should all be licensed the same as dogs are Making a Bold Stand.

Sir,—I have been a reader of Cage Birds for about a year, and I must congratulate you on the magnificent way in which you have established the great boon to bird lovers and fanciers generally, namely, Cage Birds League. A League of this kind has been wanted for a long time, and now it has started I am confident it will prosper, and in a very short time we shall be able to make a bold stand against the meddlers who seek to injure our pleasant and harmless hobby. If it is cruel to keep birds in cages I should like to know how it is that this same society which professes to protect dumb animals does not try to put a stop to Fox hunting, Deer hunting and Game shooting. We all know that it is the gentle people who indulge in this kind of sport and pastime, and I presume it is these same people who so generously subscribe to this society in order that they may attack us, the working men of the country, by trying to deprive us of our Fancy. I daresay some of the members of this society of Prevention of Cruelty to Animals go hunting themselves, others may go shooting rabbits or game, and if chasing a fox until he drops with exhaustion, or shooting and wounding a rabbit sufficiently to keep it from getting to cover is not as cruel as keeping birds in cages, then it is time some of these faddists showed us where cruelty comes in.

A Member's Views.

Sir,—Whilst reading my Cage Birds of June 17, I noticed Mr. Fulljames's report of a lady correspondent, saying there should be no occasion for such a League as Cage Birds League; her own statement puts an impression upon our minds that the League in needed more than any of us thought. I for one can fully see that our interests in the Cage Bird Fancy are going to be marred by a few so-called humanitarians, unless we all rally up and help to fight them. I suppose she wouldn't interfere with the so-called sportsmen who shoot thousands of birds every year, and what about those young birds that would starve? There are many instances where young birds have got out of their nest, got into the street or road, have been picked up by some fancier who has taken them home, gone through the laborious task of hand feeding, and kept in luxury the young birds which would otherwise have been starved. Perhaps they will say that is nonsense, but I have seen many cases of the kind. If it is cruel to keep birds in cages, it must be cruel to keep animals in cages also. If we have to liberate our birds, think of the many thousands of Canaries that would die within a term of three days; would the leaguers be any better off for it? I'm sure many a poor man would be far worse off, as I believe it is many an old man's pleasure.

Let us have money behind us, so that we shall be ready for any onslaught by these "feeling men." Unemployment is great now but it would be far greater if ever such a disastrous thing should come into operation, as the Humanitarian League wishes. Perhaps the lady writer is a person who has had no experience of bird keeping, or she would know that birds would not pair unless they were contented or happy. In concluding my remarks I may say that we have great reasons to thank Cage Birds for publishing letters, etc., and thereby bringing before our notice things that we should have otherwise known nothing at all about until the faddists had got such a hold that we should have had no chance whatever to overcome them. What we must do now, anyone that can spare the small sum of 1s. 6d, is to send it on and have the consolation of belonging to a League that has at heart the interests of the up-keep of the Cage Bird Fancy. I remain one in favour of the League.

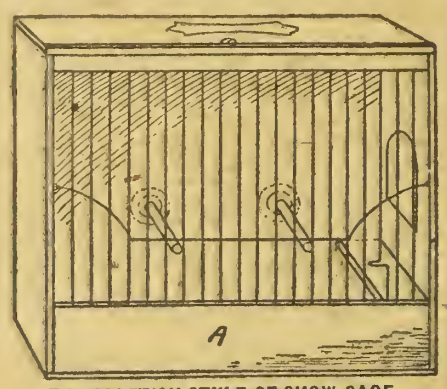
My Style of Show-cage.

The style of cage I find the most useful and most easily cleaned out is the Scottish pattern, with sliding front and groove let in each side (as illustrated). As regards the colours of the enamel, I generally use two. The first of these is a dark olive green; I find this colour suits the Goldfinch admirably. Another is green enamel—the malachite or apple green, as some describe it. It is a very pretty green, and is warm, comfortable and attractive. It is rather difficult to procure, but it is possible to obtain it from two London firms. It is called "Velure" in the trade, and it takes at least four days to dry. Bear this in mind, however, that when it is dry it will not chip or crack even if the wood is bent; and it also drys as hard as china.

I used to construct my own cages at one time, but owing to the increasing number of my birds and to business pressure, I find it just as cheap to get my cages made to my special requirements by a competent cage-maker. Mind you, "anything" will not do for me in this respect, as I have them made in the rough without enamel—no dead-knots or putty cracks or shakes for me. I then finish them off, and enamel them myself.

I use the small bossed perches, screwed to the back of the cage, about three and a half inches apart for small Finches, and wider for the larger species. I also like a seed-hopper in addition. This, the Scotch pattern cage illustrated does not include, which, in my opinion, is a great mistake and a drawback, for the birds usually get into a bad habit of continually running about the bottom of this cage amongst the seed and droppings, and consequently clog their feet and disarrange their feathers. I have brought a few of these pattern cages with me this evening so that you may see for yourselves, and when you do so I am sure you will admit that my few remarks on this points are quite feasible. By having the hopper, the seed is not thrown out of the front of the cages, but is kept clean in them; and it is far sweeter for the birds to eat. The worst drawback of all, in having the seed at the bottom of your cages, is that you may have a drinking pot that runs, or perhaps a steward who waters your birds is a little short-sighted and over-fills the drinker; the water then runs down the cage fronts and amongst the seed, making a terrible mess of both cage and bird.

A Great Mistake.



Then, in regard to the material for the bottom of the show cage. I have read of many experts who recommend sand. This, I think, is a great mistake, especially in show cages, for where a man sends a large number of birds away to various exhibitions, he is continually scraping and washing out; and you must not forget that by washing out an enamelled cage where sand has been you are certain to cut and scratch the back and sides badly. Other experts recommend cocoanut fibre. Although this is somewhat better than sand, I know of nothing better than ordinary white blotting-paper, for it gives the cage a clean appearance, absorbs all the moisture from the droppings, and when a bird comes home from the show all you have to do is to lift the paper out, sponge out the cage, and dry it with a wash-leather, and put a fresh piece in (cut to the size of the cage) when you will be ready again to send it to another exhibition.

In conclusion, if you wish to be successful in this branch of the Fancy, you must not let the grass grow under your feet or allow the rising sun to scorch your eyes out whilst lying in bed in the morning, when your proper place is attending to the wants of your feathered pets. Get up early, gather your wild seed, and give your birds their early morning bath. Then I feel confident in saying you will be well repaid later on. You must be willing always to forego a long holiday, and many other pleasures. You must make a martyr of yourself, as it were, on behalf of your birds; that is, if you have not a competent and reliable "stable companion."

Although drifting somewhat away from my subject, it is only a few days since you read of a terrible catastrophe at a music-hall in Edinburgh, and of the devotion and tender care exhibited towards a dumb animal by that clever and wonderful illusionist, the Great Lafayette. It should be so with us and our hobby. At least, it is so with me. And as he loved his famous dog "Beauty," so do I love my birds.

I attribute much of my success, if not all, to the untiring efforts and devoted attention paid to the birds by my wife and eldest daughter, who are just as keen and as fond of the birds as I am. I have had at times as many as 300 birds, and I have been able to leave them through business causes, etc., entirely to the wife for a whole week, with no casualty or sick birds on my return. I cannot speak too highly of the value of a good helpmate, who thoroughly understands your hobby, especially when a man has to be away at business and cannot get home to attend to his birds' little wants. On the other hand, I have known many really keen fanciers, who have expended vast sums of money on their birds, etc., and who would have honoured the Fancy by their stay in it, to be driven out of it simply because of their wives' indifference to and negligence of their birds. Such fanciers have my deepest sympathy, and I am happy in the knowledge that I have been more fortunate than they. I should have liked to make her a member of several societies I belong to, but she prefers to allow me to get all the honour and glory.

Secondly, I attribute much of my success to the valuable information given in our popular journal, Cage Birds. I also pin my faith to treating and feeding my birds as near to Nature as I dare, and, as I said before, I do not forget "the order of the bath"! In closing my poor and scanty information, I assure you I have conscientiously given you a true account in every detail of my British bird management. I have held nothing back and have kept nothing "up my sleeve." Unfortunately, I have been unwarrantably and unfairly baited and attacked through the Fancy Press by spiteful malcontents (I cannot describe them otherwise). But with it all I am still happy and contented to rest on my laurels, assuring myself it is only the usual penalty that a successful exhibitor experiences.

THE SCOTTISH STYLE OF SHOW CAGE.
As described by Mr. Marley. "A" is the front, which slides out (upwards).

Personally I think the time has arrived when officials of societies should put a stop to all this unnecessary petty quibbling by brother members through the Press. I think that where one member unwarrantably attacks another through the medium of the Press he should be made to apologise publicly to the whole of his brother members, and failing this he should be expelled. If a fancier has a grievance against a brother member, they should settle their little differences between themselves or at the headquarters of the club to which they belong. This, I think, would foster a better feeling of respect and personal honour among brother members all round.

If this humble paper is the means of lifting some brother member one rung up the ladder of fame, or of stimulating him to greater achievements, I shall be more than compensated for all the trouble I have taken. I feel it a great honour to have given this paper to such a splendid assembly. I shall be pleased to answer questions to the best of my ability.

Wild-Bird Life.

Summer Birds.

The majority of the migrants arrive in the early spring months and stay until autumn, but there are birds that somehow we always associate with summer. In our birdy calendar it is spring when the Chiff Chaff and Wheatear first put in an appearance. With the coming of the Swallows, Cuckoo, and Wryneck, we know that we are on the eve of brighter skies and warmer days, but it is with the Turtle Doves, Butcher-bird, Fly-catcher, and Nightjar we associate the full glory of summer. The May blossoms have gone, and among the hawthorn boughs are little green bunches that are to feed the Redwings and Fieldfares in winter. The hedgerows are laden with dog-roses when we love to listen to the cooing of the Turtle Dove, watch the bold Shrike in the vicinity of last year's nesting site, and the Nightjar's churring is heard when many wayside blossoms give their fragrance to the evening air. To many the Nightjar is almost as much a bird of mystery as the Cuckoo. His love note is not the tuneful melody one associates with feathered creatures; it is somewhat weird and uncanny, uttered only in the evening when the gloom of the woodlands is not particularly inviting to any but those who are intimately acquainted with nature at all times. Rough heaths and commons bordering woods are favourite haunts of this bird (frequently called the Fern Owl), and the two marble-like eggs are often deposited in the shade of the thick braken. When wandering across the heath one may occasionally flush the bird during the daytime, when he flies in a bewildered manner, and soon settles again, for they are quite nocturnal birds and do not move from choice when the sun shines. Like all night birds the plumage of the Evejar is soft and fluffy, and he glides over the bracken and between the pines in a noiseless ghost-like manner. The soft flapping of the wings is scarcely audible, no matter how close the bird is, as he wheels and twists after the moths and beetles in the still night air. The day is spent in rest in some favourite spot, and should this be the branch of a large tree, the bird does not perch in the orthodox manner, but sits lengthwise along the branch, where he is scarcely visible to the keenest of observers.

A Question of Identity.

F. J. W. S. sends a young bird for identification, taken from a nest eight feet from the ground. There were two eggs somewhat resembling those of the Chaffinch. He says the old birds "looked something like a Woodlark in size, shape, and appearance," and the nest was composed of twigs and leaves and loosely built. Unfortunately these particulars do not very well join together to assist in identification. The Woodlark builds upon the ground; the nest described is somewhat like that of the Nightingale, also a ground builder, or nearly so, and the eggs do not resemble either bird's. The young one is not far enough advanced in feather to assist one in making a definite assertion as to its species. The beak is that of a softbill, and the legs and feet are only fairly strong. It more nearly resembles the Spotted Flycatcher than anything, although the situation of the nest is against its being that species, because as a rule these birds build their nests in snug nooks, frequently against the stem of a tree, but not in a bush, as described by F. J. W. S. Perhaps he can get another sight of the parents and note particularly their plumage and habits.—H. N.

Club Reports.

WIGAN AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, held July 1st, Mr. P. Vickers in chair. Minutes passed as read, and correspondence gone through. Mr. W. Ridge gave account of his visit to Manchester re Union for Lancashire and Cheshire. It was proposed that Wigan join if union is formed, Mr. Ridge being instructed to attend next meeting.—W. Dyer, Hon. Sec.

GLASGOW AND WEST OF SCOTLAND N.M.B. AND F.C.

Monthly meeting held June 27. Mr. John Brown, President, occupied the chair. The business was the classification for annual members show and election of judges. The classification remains as last year, with one or two minor alterations. The judges were then elected. Final arrangements were made for First Feather show. The following new members were appointed:—Mr. McMuchan, Cathcart; Mr. W. Kirk, Bishopbrigs; Alex. Edwards, Parkhead; Wm. Adam, Cathcart. This terminated a most successful meeting, there being a good turn out of members.—F. Taylor, Sec.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.C.

Meeting in Village Schoolroom, Alexandria, on July 4th, President J. Hannay occupying the chair. The Hall Committee gave in their report, and it was unanimously agreed to secure the Lesser Public Hall, Alexandria, for first feather show, on August 5th, from 2 o'clock until 6 p.m., and Large Public Hall with ante-room for the annual show, November 18th. Prize cards and other arrangements for first feather show having been agreed upon, the remainder of the evening was passed with a very instructive and homely chat on colour-feeding for exhibition. Mr. J. H. Adams (Glasgow) has kindly consented to judge first feather show.—A. H. McLean, Sec.

UDDINGSTON AND DIST. O.S.

Monthly meeting held July 1st, Mr. H. Donnon in the chair. Secretary reported taking of public hall for young bird show at a very little cost, was approved of by all. A motion to reduce our classes was carried; reduced from 25 to 20. Agreed to open show from 2 p.m. till 7 p.m. Judging from 2 till 3. Admission 6d.; from 3 till close, 3d. Entries close August 4th. Secretary will be in reading room from 8 p.m. till 9 p.m. on that date to take entries. No entries will be taken after Friday evening. Entry fee 3d. per bird. Where less than seven birds are entered, points to count from lowest bird. Agreed to have leaflet schedules printed. Members are requested to pay first instalment of subs. along with entries.—Jno. Kilpatrick, Sec.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

General meeting held July 6th. The Vice chairman, Mr. J. Shepherd, occupied the chair. Among the letters read was the granting of the patronage of the Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C., and the Yorkshire C.C., Ramsden Cup, Money Specials, and Open Novice competitions. The following new members were elected; Mr. E. Steel, Blaydon, Mr. J. Moody Gateshead and Mr. E. Cracknell, Newcastle. Mr. J. N. T. Scott raised the point as to the secretary receiving subscriptions after the end of May, which is the closing date. As Mr. Crawhall was giving us a lecture it was moved that a committee meeting be held on July 18th, to thoroughly discuss the question. Mr. Crawhall then gave us his ideas on Line or Pedigree Breeding. This he did in a splendid manner and illustrated his remarks by a large chart. The subject is very deep and gave food for a lot of thinking, and future possibilities in the way of systematic inbreeding. A very instructive discussion was held; the principal speakers being Messrs. Currah, Maddison, Robson, Shepherd, Scott, Petterson and Mackenzie. Mr. Crawhall had a busy time answering questions, which he did in his usual kindly way. Mr. Currah moved a hearty vote of thanks be given to Mr. Crawhall for his kindness on this and many other occasions. This was seconded by Mr. J. N. T. Scott, and ably supported by Messrs. Shepherd and Robson. A hearty vote of thanks to the Judges and helpers at the Nest Feather Show was also accorded.—J. E. Atkinson, Sec.

PRESTON O.S.

General meeting, Tokio Cafe, July 6th. It was finally settled to engage St. Wilfred's Rooms, Corporation Street, for our open show, it being voted a fine room for light and comfort and one suitable for the accommodation of a large number of birds, also its nearness to the Central Station affords quick delivery and dispatch. Judges engaged: Messrs. J. H. Roe for Norwich, etc., and C. Houlton for the Brit. and For., etc (providing these two could be engaged). The medals won at the recent F.F. show were presented to the winners and prize money paid to the members. A vote of thanks was proposed to Mr. Waring for kindly judging the birds at the recent shows, and was carried.—J. P. Leeming, Sec.

THATTO HEATH AND DIST. O.S.

Meeting held July 3rd, Nutgrove School, Mr. Gibbin in chair. A fair number of members attended. Re F.F. show, held June 24th, prize money was paid, etc., a small balance on the right side resulting, which was put to swell the funds of the society. A vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Houlton, who officiated as judge, also to Mr. Griffiths, who kindly accommodated us with the building for the show. It was moved and seconded that the date of the old bird show be fixed for January 20th, 1912. Judge and classification to be fixed at next meeting, which will be held August 14th, on account of Bank Holiday intervening. All members are earnestly requested to attend and bring their friends.—Messrs. Tyson and Leather, Hon. Secs.

GRIMSBY & CLEETHORPES R.C.S.

Meeting held June 24, at headquarters, 119, Cleethorpes Road, Grimsby, Mr. Grooves presiding. Owing to the wretched weather prevailing that evening, the meeting was sparsely attended. Two new members—Mr. Crooke and Mr. C. Ashton—were enrolled. In the absence of the hon. sec., through illness, Mr. Ives, the vice-chairman, deputised. It was decided that the adult school terms be accepted, in which to hold the society's first Roller singing contest and show on December 1 and 2, and that Messrs. F. A. Lester, London, and T. Oldroyd, Wakefield, be invited to judge. A discussion took place on the feeding and method of training young birds. The threadbare, but nevertheless important, subject, "The Pest of the Bird-room," red mite, and the means to mitigate it, was also discussed, but to eradicate it altogether is a problem believed to be yet unsolved. Next meeting July 29.—W. Yardley, Hon. Sec.

NATIONAL GREEN-MARKED YORKSHIRE C.C.

Important Committee meeting held July 1, at the Market Tavern, Bradford, when a good attendance of members was recorded. Mr. W. H. Shackleton, president, in the chair. The following new members, were enrolled:—Messrs. T. Tidswell (Bradford), W. B. Atkinson (Thackley), C. E. Morrison (Brighouse), F. and J. Burdekin (Halifax), M. Kilburn (Fourweather Green), S. (a) That the specials for open competition at club shows be as suggested, which included a valuable special of £5 5s. presented by R. B. Wright, Esq., Liverpool. (b) That Ramsden's competition be as last year, with same conditions. (c) Breeders' competition and additional competition for breeders of exhibits only for a special, value £1 1s., presented by L. Briggs, Esq. (d) Open Novice competition, as last year, which includes a valuable tea urn presented by T. Sandiford, Esq., Preston. Now, novices, show your appreciation of these gentlemen's kind offer by enrolling yourselves as members, and make the competition keen. After careful consideration on account of judges and dates clashing, the following societies were granted the club's patronage for next season:—October 14 Bradford West, Nov. 3 and 4 Liverpool O.S., Nov. 11 Windhill and Dis., Nov. 25 Brighouse, Dec. 1 and 2 Halifax O.S., Dec. 9 Bradford Cinderella Show, Dec. 16 Queensbury C.B.A.; 1912, Jan. 6 Sandy Lane, Jan. 20 City of Bradford O.S., Feb. Crystal Palace (L. and P.O.S.). The President cordially thanked the members for their attendance, especially considering the number of meetings on this date.—F. Armstrong, Hon. Sec.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held Lockhart's Cafe, Briggate, Mr. J. P. Moir in the chair. Owing to the unavoidable absence of our advertised lecturer, chairman asked Mr. J. Chambers to give us a few words on breeding and rearing. Starting from the nest, he touched on every stage and process till the birds were ready for the show cage, after which various questions were heaped upon him, chiefly on the different green foods. He advised fanciers to use fresh young lettuce, as he had derived great benefits by doing so. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Chambers for filling the post of lecturer so admirably. He thanked the meeting in return. During the evening five new members were elected in Messrs. Lickley, Guthrie, Barker, Kay and Ames. This augurs well for the future of the society.—W. A. Wilson, Hon. Sec.

LEYTON AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Meeting July 3rd, Mr. J. A. Bartlett in the chair. Several members present subscribed to special prize list for young stock show, July 22nd; we have now quite a nice lot of specials. Mr. T. H. Harrison gave his promised lecture on "Mendel's Theory of the Science of Breeding." This proved very interesting, the lecturer dealt most ably with the different methods by which Mendel had arrived at his conclusions. The lecturer also explained how he had produced blue ducks by the same methods that Mendel had used. Those who were not present missed a real treat. Many questions were asked, and ably answered by Mr. Harrison. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, to which he suitably responded. The usual vote of thanks to the chair then closed a very pleasant evening.—Forse and Son, Hon. Secs.

ALNWICK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting July 6, some 40 members being present. Competition for valuable prizes given by the Vice-chairman (Mr. W. Sanders) for best young bird bred by a member, brought together some of the best of the district, the winner being a very smart variegated buff Yorks., owned by Messrs. Nesbit and Wright, the runner-up a dark Linnet Mule bred by Carns and Forster. Mr. A. Dippie (Morpeth) made the award. After the competition Mr. Dippie gave a very interesting exhibition of hand-washing, explaining as he proceeded, first the temperature of the water, which the members tested by dipping their hands in the various basins before he started to work, then the holding of the bird during the operation. Mr. Dippie proceeded slowly, so that all present could see and note the methods he used; while the bird was drying several members took part in a discussion on colour-feeding and Sib.-breeding. Mr. Dippie's demonstration and remarks were highly appreciated by everyone present.—R. Foster, Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Meeting July 3; capital attendance. The special prizes won at the recent young bird show were distributed by Mr. T. Hawley. In handing four, including one for best young bird, to Mr. J. Bowers, he expressed the hope that the recipient would do better on a future occasion. Secretary reported result of cup competition as follows:—J. Pitchford 17 points, J. Bowers 14, T. Walker, F. W. Alcock, J. Butters, 13 each, J. Holland, J. Davis W. H. Walton 10 each, W. Roberts 8, C. Clay 5, G. Lea 4, J. Keeling, Cyril Clay 3, H. George, G. Wood, 2 each, T. Fawley, 1. Mr. Pitchford announced his intention to retire from the competition, which leaves matters in an interesting condition for the final contest which takes place at the open show in November next. The next meeting falling on August Bank-holiday, it was decided to postpone it to third Monday in August. Mr. W. Wade, of Dugulas, gave a most interesting and instructive lecture on Colour Feeding, which was much appreciated by all present. A vote of thanks proposed by Mr. Walker, and seconded by Townsend, to Mr. Wade for his kindness, was heartily carried.—J. Pitchford, Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S

Meeting at headquarters on Tuesday night, July 4th, Mr. F. Cole in the chair. A good number of members were present, when the chairman called upon Mr. H. E. Tringham to open a discussion on "Colour Feeding." Mr. Tringham, upon rising, said that he had no intention of taking up too much of the time of the meeting. He had brought with him specimens of the capsicum pods and the pepper which they produced, and in a very lucid manner he proceeded to explain them, and his own methods of feeding. At the close of his remarks he was much applauded. A general discussion then took place, most of those present taking a part, many interesting points were raised, and in this way much useful information obtained. It was, however, clearly demonstrated by the discussion that there is no royal road to obtain the best results, most fanciers having their own ideas and methods to obtain that which all aimed—the best colour possible in their birds. A very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Tringham; also to Mr. Cole for so ably conducting the meeting. Five new members were elected: Mr. Spillman, the well known Norwich exhibitor; Rev. H. A. Soames, of Bromley; Mr. and Mrs. Austin, of Brockley, and Mr. Bowage, of Dulwich. Our membership now totals well over the hundred.—W. Hudson, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Monthly meeting, held July 4, at headquarters, Rose and Crown Hotel, Waingate, chairman, Mr. T. Dawn presiding. Secretary reported having booked Foresters Hall for members' back-end show, December 2. Decided that specials for Nest Feather Show, July 22nd, be given in kind. Several specials were promised to the long list already obtained, including two for the foreign bird section, for novices that have never won a prize with a foreign bird. Now novices, show your appreciation. Resolved, that our ramble on July 16 be again to that lovely district, the Dukeries (via Worksop), and that Mr. T. Simpson, Worksop, again be our guide. Our headquarters will be the Greyhound Hotel, Worksop. The time of starting will be as before, train leaving Great Central at 1.40 p.m., returning 8.36 p.m.; return fare and tea 3s. 2d. inclusive. Tickets may be had from 69, Alexandra Road, or Mr. J. Mace, Blonk Street, and the station platform. All fanciers and friends invited. This is one of the best day's outings to be had for miles round Sheffield. All business, enrolling of new members, etc., having been done, the tit-bit of the evening in the way of a lecture on the Breeding, Rearing, Moulting, Showing and General Management of the Norwich Plainhead Canary was given by our friend and member, Mr. J. A. T. Woodall. The lecturer touched upon every stage and progress from the nest to the show bench. The process of colour feeding was given at great length, and the best way to get colour was clearly shown. To illustrate the various colour feeds, our friend had on view the various capsicum and chill pods, etc. Having interested us for over an hour, questions were invited, which Mr. Woodall fully answered. A hearty vote of thanks was given, Mr. Woodall for treating us to what was considered by all present the most interesting and instructive lecture on the Norwich Canary heard in Sheffield for some years. Responding, he said it had given him much pleasure to give us the experiences he had gained in the twenty years he had been breeding the Norwich bird.—T. Bishop, Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER AND S.F.C.

Monthly meeting of the Northern Border and Scotch Fancy C.C., held, Lockharts Cafe, July 3rd. There was a grand turn-out of members, being the best meeting we have had. The society goes on by leaps and bounds, and those who do not join us will be sorry afterwards. Several letters were read re patronage, but we have still a few shows vacant. Secretaries of societies should apply before next meeting or they may be left out, as we have decided on a fixed number of shows. The printing of the rules was left till next meeting. The following new members were admitted: Mr. Smith (Elswick), Mr. Nickelson (Haltwhistle), Mr. Newcombe (Sunderland)—this member cycled over so as to be at the meeting—and Mr. Parkin (Chester-le-Street). Proposed by Mr. Currah and seconded by Mr. Reed, that we give our patronage to six shows; agreed. Mr. Currah proposed and Mr. Smith seconded (while Mr. Shepherd did not hear) that the "Good" Shepherd give us his lecture, "His experiences as a Fancier," and it was unanimously carried. The "Good-Shepherd" gives us this lecture on August 14th, and all are welcome. Don't miss it! Some discussion then took place re a President, and a Vice President. Rule 16 had to be altered, owing to the club being a faster growing "baby" than was expected, and the committee now number twelve instead of five as before. The following twelve good men and true were saddled with the management, Messrs. Aflech, Craig, Farrer, Harvey, Johnson, Montgomery, Parkin, Snaith and W. Smith. The table show was during this time being judged. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Shepherd for judging, to which he replied and said he could not let the occasion go past without commenting on the outstanding quality of the 1st Scotch Fancy, and he congratulated the owner, Mr. Harvey, on having bred such a fine bird. He also remarked on the high average standard of the Border exhibits, and the good staging. The next meeting night falling on Bank Holiday, it was agreed to postpone it till a week later, August 14th. A request that each member, "Catch a Pal," closed one of the best meetings we have held.—J. N F Scott, Sec.

NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

Young Stock show held in the Library Hall, Stoke Newington with the magnificent total of 231 exhibits, constituting a record for this Association and, we believe, the largest young stock show held during the past ten years at least. As usual for this Association the quality of exhibits was excellent and in many instauces gave the judge some difficulty in separating the winners, especially in the British section. The new three tier staging made by two of the members, Messrs. Neighbour and J. Bell, was in use for the first time, and many appreciative remarks were passed anent same. The staging was covered with fireproof cloth which added considerably to its appearance. There was a record attendance, the Hall being well filled, and fanciers from all parts were to be seen keenly examining the exhibits. The value of advertising the show was clearly proved, as we noticed one fancier from Croydon and another from Harrow. Special winners were Messrs. Cook, Penton, Cawthorne, Harper, Ayling, Jefferies, Marley, Davies, Mortlock and Williams. The management was very good indeed, the secretary, Mr. R. P. Harper, being one of the most capable officials in the Fancy. Mr. J. Robson judged.

Nest Feather Show, July 8. Over 100 youngsters faced the judge, Mr. P. J. Davies, of Millom. Borders showed a marked improvement on previous years. Scotch Fancies also turned up well, and were of a high order. The Challenge Cup went to a topping clear buff Yorkshire, owned by Mr. W. Johnson. The cup for best Border was won by an excellent clear buff owned by Mr. Fleming; silver rose-bowl for best Border (opposite in colour) went to a smart yellow owned by Mr. Templeman, the hon. sec., who, with a good working committee, had everything in true fancierlike order.

ORMSKIRK.

Ormskirk Young Bird Show was held July 8th in the Church House Assembly Room when some 60 entries faced Mr. Chas. Houlton who judged. A very typical lot of Norwich was staged, amongst these a grand young Yellow, which won spl for best young Canary. Yorks. were a fair good lot, and Borders were very good. That very old fancier, Mr. Jno. Walmsley, still shows, but this time in the Yorke. Friend John has not yet bred out the very high shoulders and drooping neck and head to quite pass muster—too much Belgian. Yet three nice young dark Goldie Canaries were shown, and a very good lot of British made up the show. A novel feature was adopted here, viz., admitting the public free, so as to create more enthusiasm and make the Fancy stronger by inducing visitors to become members and fanciers. Quite a lot of young folks turned in, and seemed to take very keen interest in the birds. Mr. Tiffin, the Hon. Sec., had matters in A1 order, and the judge was complimented over his placings.

STOCKSBRIDGE AND DIST. C.B.S.

Second nest feather show, held July 1st, when about 32 birds were staged. Considering we have not had one of the best seasons here, the numbers were up to the average. The Yorkshires were a lovely lot; some will be heard of again after a good moult. Norwich were also a classy lot, and considering the short time the society has been formed, the members have got together some good strains. Mr. T. Bishop, of Heeley, Sheffield, judged, and his awards were well received.

SITTINGBOURNE C.B.S.

First annual Y.B.S. held on July 5th in the club room of the George Hotel, Sittingbourne, and thanks to the energetic endeavours of the secretary, backed up by a hardworking committee, the show proved to be a great success. Altogether there were 70 birds staged, and they were efficiently judged by Mr. J. Wickham (Chatham). There was a good attendance at the opening ceremony, when Mr. B. Tidy apologised for the absence of Mr. W. R. Elgar, President of the Society, who was to have opened the show. In his absence Mr. Tidy said they had had to fall back on the President of their sister society, the Sittingbourne Homing Society, Mr. R. H. Prentis. Mr. Prentis said that as far as cage birds were concerned his knowledge was not very great. The only bird he had was a Parrot, which he might have shown, only he destroyed his cage once a week. (Laughter.) He believed it a very good show indeed, and he expressed the hope that the succeeding shows would be even larger and better. (Applause.) Mr. B. Tidy proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Prentis and Mr. Wickham. The judging by Mr. Wickham gave everybody satisfaction.

In the pretty flower garden of Ravencourt Park, Hammersmith, a Thrush has built a nest in a creeper arch not more than seven feet away from the seats, and within easy reach of a person of average height. There she sits quite unconcerned about the passers-by, only leaving the nest to get food for herself and the youngsters she has hatched out.

WHERE TO ADVERTISE.

I bred over 100 Canaries last season, and had great results through advertising in "Cage Birds." I had to send several postal orders back, as I had sold all out.—Miss E. Hughes (Wem, Salop).

Kindly thank all those who replied to my advert re Goldfinches in "CAGE BIRDS" of June 30th, as they were too numerous to answer individually. I had piles of letters and postcards reach me by every post during the week.—E. Cockram (Chard).

Owing to the great number of letters and postcards re advt. of my Yorkshire cock, I cannot reply to all. Would you please state this in your next issue.—A. Southern (Uphall Station).

You might thank those who answered my advt. in "CAGE BIRDS" the other week, as I could not reply to all—over 40 letters and postcards. I was glad when the postman ceased to come up the stairs! Many thanks to all.—Jno Kilpatrick (Uddingston).

Kindly thank all who replied to my advertisement in "CAGE BIRDS" for Canaries. I had so many I could not really write to all, as no one sent a stamp for reply.—C. Leventon (Melton Mowbray).

A Thriving Species.

Never were young Sparrows so numerous as they are this season. The bright sunshine suits the old birds admirably; consequently full clutches of eggs have become healthy broods of young ones, which have invariably been safely reared to pester amateur gardeners and poultry keepers. Later on, when this numerous army takes its autumn holiday in the corn fields of the southern counties, the farmers' language will contain no cheery welcome for the town-bred visitors.

Fooling the Young Bird.

Lecturing at the Royal Photographic Society's exhibition at Prince's Skating Rink, Knightsbridge, the other day, Mr. F. Martin Duncan said he had watched a Willow Wren deliberately "fool" her offspring. After flying back to the young one fifteen times within half an hour, on each occasion with insects in its beak, says the "Daily News," the mother-bird rested for a few minutes, and the voracious youngster appeared to be satisfied also. Presently the latter got restive and asked for more, whereupon the mother-bird locked sharply round, made a movement as though to give the young one food, and then, while the latter opened its mouth expectantly, tickled its throat with its empty beak. The young one made a gulp and relapsed into content. Mr. Duncan added that he had himself tickled the throats of impatient young Cuckoos with a piece of straw, with the same result.

Time-keeping by Song.

The clock of bird song is constantly altering with the altering seasons (writes Mr. E. A. B. Dewar in the "Standard"), but it really does afford a sort of timepiece to those who care to follow it with nicety. Thus, as the last Song-Thrush notes on a rapt July evening early in the month tell me it is nine or five past—very exceptionally ten past—so the first Lark notes on an early June morning tell me it is just about two o'clock. These are the only two birds that I have timed in June and July exactly, but Major Arundel has sent me from High Ackworth, in Yorkshire, this bird time-table for a night and early morning in June:—2.5 a.m., Skylark; 2.25 a.m., Whin-Chat (five or six Whin-Chats heard before a note of the Song-Thrush); 2.30 a.m., Song-Thrush; 2.35 a.m., Blackbird and Cuckoo; 2.40 a.m., Redbreast; 2.55 a.m., Hedge Sparrow and Yellow Bunting; 3 a.m., Whitethroat; 3.2 a.m., Swallow; 3.5 a.m., Tree Pipit; 3.15 a.m., Pheasant; 3.20 a.m., Willow Wren; 3.25 a.m., Chaffinch; 3.27 a.m., Rook; 3.33 a.m., Greenfinch; 3.40 a.m., Turtle Dove; 4.7 a.m., Martin.

A Home-made Water Bottle.

Sent by Mr. W. Jepson, St. John's Vicarage, Lewisham High Road, London, S.E.

This bottle is for use when a number of water-tins have to be filled and when the tins are inside the cages. A bottle with a wide neck is needed, and about a foot and a half of ¼in. diameter glass tubing. The bottle must have a cork of minimum width 1in. By filing at a point 4in. from the end of the tubing, cut off four inches of it. Bend this piece one inch from the end by first softening it in a spirit or gas flame. With the remaining piece of tubing perform the same operation two inches from one end, taking care to rotate it whilst heating it in the flame. Let these two pieces cool. With a red-hot skewer burn two holes in the cork about ¼in. apart. If a skewer is not used, an instrument of the same width must be used. First place the cork in the bottle, next pass No. 1 tube through one hole and No. 2 through the other. The top of the cork should be covered with putty, especially round the tubes and edges of the bottle. Let the hottle stand aside for a day or two. To fill it put No. 1 to the lips and No. 2 to a bowl of water. Suck at No. 1 and the water will enter at No. 2. To fill the water tins, hold the hottle in a horizontal position with No. 2 to the tin. W is the line of the water in this position.—W. Jepson.

No. 527.

A Hole-boring Device.

This is a sketch of a simple tool for boring holes the same depth and distance in wood frames. To make, get two pieces of wood and a strip of 24 gauge iron 5in. long, ½in. wide, and ½in. thick (or any suitable length required), and a few wire nails the same as are used for cage making. Take out one of the pieces of wood, mark off the width of each hole, and drive the nails right through the wood, forming a comb. Now take the other piece of wood and the strip of iron, place the iron between the two pieces of wood, and screw them together, and your boring tool is complete. "A" in the sketch is the wood; "B" the iron; "C" the screws; and "D" the nails. (The name and address of the sender of this idea have been mislaid; we shall be glad if he will communicate with us.—Editor.)

How Young Birds Improve.

Allow me to thank you for the excellent drawing of my Yellow Marked Norwich reproduced in your popular weekly Cage Birds. It was quite a pleasant surprise. This bird, as an unflighted one, I exhibited two or three times in 15s. selling classes, and it won one 2nd only, and no one claimed him. Then last season, besides winning 1st at the L.C.B.A. (Horticultural Hall) Show, he won cup at Dulwich and Peckham Show for best bird in five or six classes. That shows how careful one should be about parting with an unflighted bird, for he improved wonderfully with the second moult.—A. W. Hollands (Blackheath, S.E.).

No. 9.—My White Crested Thrushes.

In Trinidad there is a certain little brown fish called the Cascaladon, possessing a flavour of the most subtle, entrancing and captivating description. So much so, indeed, that it is said if a man eat of it he shall never leave again Trinidad. None, having once partaken, are able to tear themselves away from the fish. All the helpless creatures can do is to succumb, and live and eat and die within its reach.

That is much my position at present. Some years ago I was most reluctantly compelled to give up my birds—as I then thought for ever. So certain was I of this that I not only sold the birds, but even pulled down the aviaries, on the principle, I believe, of removing temptation, and yet here I am to-day with bird fever as bad as ever. I am beginning in a very humble way, with only a few pairs, and yet I am just as keen to begin as a heifer is for salt; but shall I bear in mind the old Latin motto, "Festina Lente" ("Go slowly")? In getting together a collection of birds you must bide your time and watch your opportunity. "Dimidium facti qui bene cepat, trabet." This is not intuitive wisdom on my part, but is gathered slowly and painfully among the thorns of experience.

Now, in starting to keep birds afresh, I find one of the greatest difficulties is to secure pairs. Man is sent into the world unfinished. Nature seems to say to him "You are incomplete. I have made the other part of you, but I do not remember where I put it, you will have to hunt for it." It is much the same with birds—the pairs are there if only you can find them. The most miserable of all hopeless ones are those who wilfully turn their backs on Hope when she stands at the next corner holding out her hand rather timidly.

Wanted: A Lady.

I am ever on the look out for the lady; and so one day during the recent Whitsuntide holidays I took my youngest boy to Hull for the day, and while there called upon a certain well-known bird-dealer to see what he might have on hand. I found the birds kept in a sort of large warehouse, with large aviary compartments ranged all round the sides. There were many rare sorts, among tho rarest some Red Crowned Parrots which I should like to have carried home, but the price was prohibitive; I therefore looked around for something more within my reach.

In one of the large cages I noticed two White Crested Jay Thrushes. These the dealer declared to be a pair, but on this point, like Hans Breetmann, I was a little "skebedgal," as the reputed lady kept on the bottom perch, like the immortal Mrs. Gummidge, in a very forlorn and subdued manner.

However, the dealer being a good sort, although still standing stoutly to his opinion, offered to allow me to take the birds home and try them in an aviary. I gladly acceded to the offer only to find my judgment instantly confirmed; for the reputed hen spent the whole day in seeking first for one city of refuge and then another, and to save its life I had to remove to other quarters. It was now a question of cherchez la femme. Happening to write to a bird friend, announcing my return to the birdy world, and asking him if he had anything he could offer me, he returned a long list, and among them I saw a Crested Indian Thrush scheduled. I accordingly wrote off, on the off chance it might be a White Crested Thrush, and a lady. A few days later the bird came to hand, and whatever else it might claim to be it certainly belonged to the ragged regiment, but then in buying birds newly come over, one must not be too particular. I always at such a time think of Betsy Prig's remark: "Who do you think's to wash one feather and miss another, or wear out one's eyes with all manner of fine work of that description—for half-a-crown a day?" I felt sure, however, at the first glance, that I had got a hen and I cheered up, as a fisherman does when after hours of nothingness, he feels a bite.

My private opinion was at once confirmed by the cock that I introduced to the stranger, for after contemplating each other for a moment with the most offensive curiosity, they both went into a perfect shout of welcome. I think the cock's shout was one of astonishment. The hen was perfectly naked from the middle of the breast, and to increase the grotesque effect she had three broken and disjointed feathers in her tail. However, the gentleman apparently considered that half a wife was better than none, and very shortly they were seated amicably side by side. The enjoyment of female society like other things depends on the scarcity!

A few days later, strange to say, I was offered a second hen; they say it never rains but it pours. The cock seemed perfectly satisfied to welcome this second addition to his harem, much on the same principle, I take it, as the old peasant, who learned for the first time that Solomon had had all those wives. Lor, sir, he cried, what blessed privileges them early Christians had!

Good-bye.

It was not long before misfortune came. A few days after the arrival of No. 2 I fancied she looked a little bit sickly; an experienced eye can tell a sick bird at a glance. The sickness followed the usual course of royal maladies. Le roi est malade, le roi se port mieux, le roi est mort, and then there was a gorgeous funeral. There had been a few little unpleasantnesses while the deceased was living; now I hoped there would be peace. What a fine country this would be if it were peaceful, dreamed a thoughtful Britisher, with a Cook's ticket in his pocket, on Killarney Lake. Peace! what would we do with it? was the scornful reply of his boatman, surprised for once into ejaculating the truth.

This seemed to be the opinion of Master Jay Thrush, for he hunted that hen about the aviary, much as Saul must have hunted David, when he feelingly described himself as "a Partridge on the mountains."

For some days I was forcibly reminded of a story told by the late Mr. Gladstone. It was the time of the late Irish disturbances. Mr. Gladstone was talking to Lord Clonmel. Now tell me, he asked saucily: I want you to tell me privately and confidentially your view, Lord Clonmel, of the relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland? "Absolute hell, my dear boy, absolute hell," was the emphatic reply of the old sportsman. However, after a time, things began to settle down, and peace spread her balmy wings around.

I put them out in a nice large garden aviary, and quite thought I should achieve another medal. In feeding expense was no object; they had the very best of soft mixtures, and they ate mealworms and blue clocks by the pail. I thought if this diet does not make them go to the nest, nothing will. They are cruel wretches, not content with devouring their victims, they literally tear them limb from limb. They are evidently Vivisectionists on principle—much like the old lady, who, after listening to a very interesting anti-vivisectionist lecture, remarked: It may be all quite true, but I must say I like my oysters to be alive!

One morning I was overjoyed to find that a nest had been commenced. It was built low down in a box tree, and was composed of rather large sticks as a foundation, well lined with coarse fibres. It was fairly solid and had a nice cup-shaped hollow, in fact I stoutly believed that eggs would early be deposited. Alas, I was doomed to disappointment. The next morning I observed the hen looking a bit "thick," always a bad sign, as it portends egg-binding. The day following I could not see her about anywhere, and feared the worst, and on going into the aviary and searching carefully under the bushes, I found the object of my search on her back in a dark corner, and my poor hen, like the Irishman's dead pig, "had passed into Eternity."

Consolation.

I felt rather sad, but like an old woman I once knew; she was dangerously ill with internal gout, but she always waved aside all expressions of condolence with the rather curious remark: "Well, you see, sir, we must all have something to bring us to our end." I suppose egg-binding is as good an end as any other.

I cannot say that my Thrushes are sweet singers, like David, King of Israel. Their voices are loud and insistent. If any fresh feed is put into their dish they exclaim at the top of their voice—Pow, pow, pow—pow, pow; reminding one irresistibly of Haydn's remark on hearing the singing of a Presbyterian congregation—Ach, Gott is merciful.

In appearance my friends are of a plain and sober garb, dressed in russet brown, with white heads and waistcoats and elongated black eye patches. They have a curious habit of playing leapfrog over each other's backs sideways, a most amusing sight to watch. The hen can be told from the cock, as she is smaller altogether, and duller in her white.

I am in great hopes that some day I shall be able to get hold of another hen; it is ever the unexpected that happens in this world. I wish I could, as since the death of his spouse the cock makes the most beastly noise from morning till night. This noise is that harsh that, as I heard a 'bus conductor say to a young female slightly elevated at 12 p.m. at Piccadilly Circus—That 'arsh, like tearing oilcloth. I often feel that I could wring his neck, but then I think to myself, how grieved I should be with myself should a lady turn up, and so I give him the benefit of the doubt.

I believe, however, that if my patience is tried too long, it will give way, and then there will be one Jay Thrush less in the world; but as he knows nothing of his danger, let us hope he is happy. I wonder whether he has ever heard those lines written on certain mice threatened with destruction:

Alas, regardless of their doom
The little victims play;
No sense have they of ills to come,
No care beyond to-day.
Yet see how all around them wait
The ministers of human fate.

Some British Finches.

By A. J. A. MARLEY (Leyton).

The Questions and Answers.

Mr. Williams: In reference to the bib of the Redpoll, is it a long bib or a round one that is required?—Answer: It should be thumb-nail shaped, and there should be as much of it as possible.

Mr. Mortlock: What is the virtue of the chopped walnut? Does it affect the feather?—Being of an oily nature, it stimulates and promotes the growth of the feather, giving the bird a remarkably fine gloss.

Mr. Sweetman: To what extent can colour food be given to a Linnet, and in what form?—I use sweet pepper only, which I mix into the seed separately in small jars, adding a small quantity of olive oil to it, so that the feed will be absorbed into the seed.

Is there sufficient moisture in the pepper to adhere to the seed?—No; that is why I add the oil. Of course, some feeds are very powdery, and require a little more oil than others; therefore, it is best to strike a happy medium.

Mr. Mortlock: Do you think that Goldfinches that are given mealworms derive any benefit from them?—I happen to have given all my Goldies mealworms; but I do not approve of making it a practice, as Goldfinches, above all birds, are inclined to get excessively "rank" on too many mealworms; they suddenly go soft and light, there is a discharge from the eyes, and you wonder how you have lost your Goldies, and even give them more to pull them round.

Mr. Harper: What is the best method of inducing a Finch to take mealworms?—Whenever I have a fresh-caught Goldie I always try him with a worm dropped into his seed-hopper. If he won't take it I catch the bird gently but firmly with the left hand, and as a rule, like the Hawfinch, it will "show fight" and pick at your hand or anything near whilst he is in your grasp; then I take a mealworm out of the tin, and let him pick at it, and eventually he bursts it. When once he tastes it he sucks it until nothing but the skin is left. Put him back in his cage, and you won't have to handle him again; usually he will take it from the seed-hopper or finger. But, as I say, don't feed Finches upon them; the worms are beneficial only when a bird is a little down in condition, and only one at that.

Mr. Mortlock, sen.: Do you agree that by giving walnuts it would be overdoing it to give the birds at the same time plenty of wild foods?—Certainly not: I strongly advise giving the birds as much wild food during the moult as they will eat. I have used it extensively, and have always had the best of results.

Mr. Mortlock, jun.: I suppose a good turf in the flight cage would not do any harm?—It certainly would do no harm, but I fail to see how it would do any good for Finches. I have never tried it.

Mr. White: Do you attribute your success to the use of the bath more than to colour feeding?—Certainly.

Mr. Hammond: Do you have any trouble with your birds, as mine seem to be always getting their "backs up"?—It does not follow that because a man is successful he has no invalids or deaths amongst his birds; and although I must say I am fortunate in these respects, I have my little reverses. In any case it is very seldom I have to register a death. If I see a bird a wee bit "thick" or soft, I usually give him three days to pull up, and treat him for his ailment. If he doesn't pull up, I give him his freedom rather than allow him to die in my possession.

Is a bird that is moulted in an attic with the window open better than a bird moulted in the open air?—When I first started keeping Britishers I kept them in cages in a Canary room, but if my memory serves me rightly I never had a look-in at the shows; neither did my birds possess that hard appearance or the polish of the feather they now have; therefore I certainly "plump" for the open air.

Mr. Neighbour: How do you improve the tanning of the Goldfinch?—By feeding systematically during the moult on all seeds, etc., in season, such as groundsel and thistle, and all varieties of cornflower, shepherd's purse. I get out into the country and watch what the Finches are feeding on; I gather this, too, and give it to my birds.

Mr. Sweetman: You don't find the birds eat the ends of the flower, do you?—They usually eat a bit of either, but principally the seeding heads; and they pick off the little green flies and other minute insects.

Mr. Mortlock, sen.: Do you agree with the practice of giving Goldies sunflower with their other seeds?—It can be given if used sparingly.

Do you think it has a tendency to improve the colour?—I should hardly think so.

Mr. Mortlock said that a well-known fancier grew a lot, and gave them to his Finches plentifully, and his birds always came out excellent in colour.

Mr. White: Should an exhibition Linnet show white in the neck?—The white, as you term it, should not really exist. The colour should be something between a dense cream and a golden tawny each side of the gullet or throat markings and the ear coverts. The better the colour in this respect he better the bird is for show purposes. A buff Linnet would not get much of a look-in when competing on equal terms with a Jonque or Yellow.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

No Results.

Pip.—The moulting season is getting too near now to hope of snatching a brood from hens which require two or three weeks treatment to bring them into condition before being mated. A hen should not require any forced feeding at all to induce her to nest after the brilliant and favourable summer weather we have had. Personally I should start afresh with strong healthy 1911 bred hens next spring. In case you do not do this, turn the other hens into a good-sized flight, and leave them there for the autumn and winter. For the next few weeks give a diet of plain Canary seed only as staple, a liberal supply of green food, plenty of clean, gritty sand, and pure fresh water for drinking and bathing. When moulting add a little bread and milk, or egg food, twice a week, and a pinch of maw three times a week. For the rest limit the diet to the above. For the next fortnight dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in their drinking water every second day, and for a week after that give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. The death of the other hen probably had nothing whatever to do with the cock failing to fertilise eggs afterwards. Cage him alone, feed on above dictary for a month, give him the soda aperient as above for a week, and the tonic mixture for one week afterwards.

Always Hoarse and Panting.

P.H.H.—Although so young, I fear this bird has already seen the best of his days. Your feeding is not of the best, but is not sufficiently bad to account for the bird's condition, so there must be some other cause at work of which I am unaware. Keep the cage in a bright, healthful place, well ventilated, but free from draughts blowing direct into it and in a fairly equable place, not in a window, not too near a fire, nor near or over a burning light in the evening, or high up near the ceiling where foul air is apt to collect. Give a staple diet of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. Every second day for a fortnight give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion and four of sherry well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days give a spray of seedy chickweed, and, if available, a nice fat mealworm. In the drinking water give 20 drops of whisky, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and half as much chlorate of potash every second day for a week. At the end of the fortnight stop these extras, and in addition to the staple diet, give only a small teaspoonful of egg food, or the equivalent in bread and milk, or crushed sponge cake, once a week; a similar quantity of mixed seed once a week, and a little green food daily until frosts come and make green stuff unsuitable. As the moult is so near it is quite likely you will find no solid improvement until the bird resumes singing after moulting.

A Curious Pair.

Firefly.—The behaviour of the pair of birds and their extremely fickle appetite is certainly somewhat curious, and I am inclined to think is indirectly due in great measure to the ravages of Father Time. It will be quite useless keeping them together any longer this season with any hopes of their going to nest, and I am sorry I cannot encourage brilliant hopes for the future. Indeed, if you pull them through the moult I think you will do well. Anyway, not to be too much of a wet blanket, try what the following treatment will do. Keep them in a bright, airy, and comfortable spot, not overheated, nor yet draughty. See the cages are quite free from mites, and keep them strewn with clean gritty sand. If the beaks and claws are much overgrown, trim them back to a natural length, to enable the birds to move about with more comfort. Keep a regular supply of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape available. In addition to this give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, egg food, or bread and milk to each daily, and sprinkle it with a quarter teaspoonful of maw. You may ring the changes on the above-named soft foods, giving first one and then another, and twice each week drop two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it. As soon as you notice the birds eating seed begin to reduce the quantity of soft food and bring it down to a little twice a week. In the drinking water give 20 drops of whisky and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and on the alternate days 20 drops of Chemical Food. After that give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid in the water every third day for a fortnight. Then report result.

Putting Birds Outdoors (W. Selby-Ennals).—Yes, certainly, put the birds in the out-door aviary as early as possible before the weather breaks, or the birds will begin to moult. Provided the weather keeps as favourable as it is at time of writing, it will not really matter if some of them have started to moult, though it will be all the better if they have time to get settled down before the moult commences. I assume you have paid due attention to the ventilation of aviary.

Drooping Wing (Mrs. C.).—No, I certainly do not advise any mechanical interference or attempts at bandaging. Such attempts are so frequently productive of far greater injury than that which they are designed to relieve, that they are invariably best left alone. Keep the bird quite quietly in a small cage, and treat generally as advised in last reply, and leave the rest to Nature. This, I am convinced, is the best course you can pursue.

Infertility (Disappointed).—I do not see anything abnormal about the bird. If the sketch is drawn full natural size the organ is no larger than may be found in perfectly normal birds in good breeding condition. The causes of unfertile eggs may be totally distinct from this. The two birds may simply not have "hit," or it may even have been due to faulty mating quite apart from any question of health or condition. Are the birds loose and feathery about the flanks and thighs? If so trim off the loose ends of the feathers neatly if the birds seems like going to nest again. Another thing you might try if mating only takes place in the nest is to remove the nestpan from morning till evening until the first egg is laid in order to try to induce the birds to mate on the perches. But do not encourage them to nest again this year.

Inbreeding (Jasmine).—Breeding with closely related birds is never to be recommended merely for its own sake, or for the purpose of making up a pair of birds. It should only be done with some special object in view, such as fixing some particular feature in a strain in order to get it reproduced with more certainty, and so forth, and the birds so mated should always be as strong and lusty as possible, of good size, and free from objectionable traits. If you are only breeding birds in a casual way with no particular aim there would be no objection to mating as you suggest provided that neither of the birds in question is the progeny of a similar related couple, and the young from them should not be again mated to related partners.

Ceased Singing (Yorkshire).—The Border cock which stopped singing with a cold recently, and has not recommenced, although now seeming quite well, may not resume his song until after the moult, which is now close at hand. Feed and treat generally as you will frequently have seen advised here for singing birds, and take due care to protect it from draughts and similar causes of colds, and it will doubtless open out again as soon as it is over the moult. If it should not do so, write us again and I will advise you, but at present I do not think any particular treatment is necessary. See the inset on this page of books advertised, all of which are practical guides, and not prohibitive in price surely. "Our Canaries" at 6d. per month, and a trifle extra for binding at the finish is certainly not prohibitive.

Losing Young (J.S.B., Rams.)—My experience would lead me to expect undoubted signs of diarrhœa from an excess of salt in the sand, and such symptoms you say are wanting. It is quite possible, however, that there may be other impurities, or an excess of salt in combination with other substances, present in the sand, and as this is the only item that varies from your previous management, which was quite successful, there certainly appears good reason to suspect it. I would advise you to well wash the sea sand in a liberal supply of fresh water, when it should be quite suitable for use. Otherwise go back to the old kind of sand. Give the ailing birds a staple of bread and milk with about a third of a teaspoonful of maw, and a few grains of Canary per bird daily until better In the drinking water give ten drops of fluid magnesia for one day, and for a day or two after add three drops of dilute sulphuric acid to each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water.

Will They Sing? (Roller).—I really cannot tell you with any certainty whether the Rollers will sing when kept altogether in one large cage. This is just one of those points which can only be decided by actual trial. Their refusal to sing when hung near each other in separate cages may not augur well for their doing so when placed together; yet it does not necessarily mean that such will be the case. Some individuals are notoriously shy of singing in company, whilst others are only incited to greater efforts by the presence of companions. As the birds would soon stop singing in any case on account of the oncoming moult, you cannot do better than put them in the flight at once. Then they will get quite familiar with each other during moulting-time and may re-commence singing quite naturaly, and would then continue to do so even when left together in the same cage. I assume you are quite certain of their sexes.

A Moulting Question (Novice).—You say the bird was colour-fed last year, and has moulted its tail and flights, and is now natural colour all over except its head, and want to know if it will moult again this year. From all this I gather that the bird has already had either a partial moult in this year, or is now undergoing and nearly completed a full moult. You give me no idea which is the case, nor at what time the bird was moulting in this year, and in the absence of such information I cannot tell whether the bird will moult again this year. If it is now finishing a moult it certainly will not; but if it only had a partial moult last spring, it probably will moult rather late this autumn. To provide against contingencies, give it a little egg food with colour added every third day, then if it begins to shed feathers you will only need to start at once on the regular moulting diet and treatment, and it will come out of moult in good condition. Meantime, if you send me the above particulars, I shall be able to reply more definitely.

Turned-up Toe (J. S. Burgess).—Give the bird only small perches—graduating from slightly thinner to a little thicker than an ordinary lead pencil—for a few weeks, or until you see it grip firmly with the turned-up toe. Also try the following treatment twice a week for a month. Place two saucers side by side, and fill one with tolerably hot water, but well below scalding point—say, as hot as you can comfortably bear the little finger in—and fill the other with cold water, in which dissolve a little common salt. Catch the bird and hold the foot in the hot water for a few minutes, then transfer it to the cold for a similar length of time, then back to the hot, and again to the cold; repeat this until the foot has been immersed in each bath alternately three or four times, and lastly in the cold water. Then dry foot and gently work about it a drop or two of olive oil. Wipe off all surplus oil before returning bird to cage. As it now is the toe would tell against the bird in good competition, but would not disqualify it.

Losing Head Feathers (Bald Pate).—Are these youngsters which are affected in this way the progeny of the old bird who is affected in the same way? If they are then I am afraid you must become reconciled to the awkward fact that it is an irremediable natural defect, and nothing you can do will be of any service. Crests are often marred by this defect, and it is one that is most difficult to breed out, and a bird so affected should not be bred with if it can be avoided in any way. If this is not the case it is probably only the effect of the approaching moult, and would be remedied by slightly smearing the bare places with sulphur ointment twice a week until the new quills are showing through the skin, and by slightly dusting the egg food with flour of sulphur once a week during the first part of the moult.

Feather Plucking (Old Joe).—Joey, my boy, how am I to tell whether you gave the birds too much saffron when you do not give the slightest idea as to what quantity you gave them? Anyway, it is probably vice rather than disease which is causing the trouble, though your letter is rather vague. I take it that the young birds of the first round of nests are plucking each other. Your best plan is to watch them closely in order to spot the chief culprits, and cage these birds alone in single cages. Those that are very bare also cage up in couples in fair sized cages, and cover over the fronts of the cages until they are decently clothed. The others may be kept in a good sized flight, and a bit or two of string tied to the wires here and there for them to ravel and thus divert their attention from the plumage. You may also give them a few plantain stalks and a handle of seedy heads of grass to occupy their minds more profitably. Add a slight dusting of flour of sulphur to the egg food you give them twice a week for a month. Give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day give half a teaspoonful per bird of summer rape; twice a week on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of hemp, linseed, inga, millet, teazle, and broken groats in about equal parts; and three times a week whilst moulting give a similar quantity of egg food or crushed sponge cake. Let them bathe freely.

Cages and Breeds (Lancaster Harry).—(1) 20ins. long, 16 ins. high, 10ins. deep is a very good size for single breeding cages. If space is at a premium 2ins. shorter and 1in. less in height will still be very serviceable, but the larger size is quite the best all round. (2) It is quite a matter of personal taste which is the best sort to breed from. As regards good breeding qualities and hardihood there are good, bad and moderate to be found in every breed, so that it is more a question of strain and environment than breed. For a beginner, Borders, Rollers, or Norwich are very generally satisfactory, and it would scarcely be wise for an absolute novice to launch out at a beginning with expensive breeds, such as Crests, Belgians, or Scotch Fancy, without first gaining some experience with a cheaper variety. To suit your own taste you should take up the parts of "Our Canaries," which contains excellent coloured plates of every breed, so you could easily see which breed you like best.

Losing Feathers (St. Elmo).—It is quite possible the birds are plucking themselves, or each other. Watch them carefully to see if this is so, and treat as advised to "Old Joe." Keep the cage floors strewn with clean, gritty sand, and feed the birds as advised in reply just referred to, and twice in one week slightly smear the bare places with sulphur ointment. Give a few plantain stalks daily. In the drinking water give 20 drops of fluid magnesia for two consecutive days. Continue to supply the bath daily.

A Late Brood (Troubled Novice).—It is, of course, quite possible a brood may be successfully brought off now, but you must not build too high hopes, as the chances are against you. In case eggs are laid you should get "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager would send you post free for 7d., and read up the chapter on feeding and rearing, and see if you can find where you went wrong before. The details cannot be given here. Briefly, whilst sitting give plain canary seed. On the evening of the thirteenth day give a very little egg food, and afterwards continue this daily, giving a fresh supply in quite small quantity two or three times a day. On the second day after hatching give a little green food, and continue this daily in small quantities fresh two or three times daily. When the hen begins to sit this time remove the cock, and leave her to hatch and rear the brood herself. Yes, four or five eggs is the usual number in a full clutch, but it is not uncommon for old or very young hens to lay only one or two. Better luck this time.

Breeding in Attic (E. O. A.).—The great fluctuations in temperatnre in summer and winter are not nearly so serious as such variations occurring within the limits of a few hours, and although as a rule they are best avoided if possible, either at long or short intervals, the above fact doubtless explains why such an attic as yours is not infrequently used very successfully as a bird-room. Indeed, I know that lots of the best specimens that have been seen on the show bench have emanated from such quarters. I see no reason at all why the room should not prove quite successful if your birds are bred and kept hitherto under normal conditions or temperature. It would, however, be a great advantage if you could enlarge the window to at least double the size and make it to open and shut, and also put in a good top ventilator, which would go far to equalise the temperature, and thus aid towards success. There is an excellent plate in "Our Canaries" of an attic converted into a bird-room, which might prove of much assistance to you.

Norwich Puffed Out (M. C.).—(1) It will be of no use keeping the Norwich cock with the hen any longer this season. Place him in a moderate size single cage. Give plain Canary only for a week, with a liberal supply of green food daily. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week. Keep cage supplied with clean gritty sand; see that it is free from red mite, and offer a bath daily. After the first week add half a teaspoonful of summer rape to the diet every second day; on two other days each week give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, teazle, and millet, and again on two other days each week for a fortnight the same quantity of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. Give a little green food daily. He may probably keep a little loose now from moulting. (2) Separate the Crest hen; keep her in a good-sized flight, and treat her for a week the same as the first week's treatment for the Norwich, and then put her on the usual ordinary diet until the moult is over.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

Cardinals, Pekins, and Weavers.

Yorkshire.—(1) It all depends on what you call a large cage. Opinions are very variable upon this point. The birds named would agree together (i.e., without serious hickering) providing the cage gives accommodation for the respective pairs to perch apart if necessary. Male Weavers agree fairly well together as bachelors, but again, they must not be crowded. (2) All the following are interesting cage birds, with the proviso that the cages are large enough for homes. No bird can do well in a prison, and a cage that does not allow space for reasonable exercise and a corner for privacy is a prison. See my article in recent issues of "C.B." on "Breeding F.B. in Cages." Zebra, Ribbon, Ruficauda Finches, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Long-tailed Greenfinches, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins, White Java Sparrows, Bengalese and Waxbills. Get our Nutshell booklet, "Waxbills," 2½d. post free, from our Manager; it will help you.

Budgerigars Shedding Feathers (Navaho).—Your diet is all right. Supply a small turf of grass in flower (i.e., with seed heads). If you take it out and moisten occasionally it will keep fresh till all seed has been picked out; green grass seed is their natural food, and they will take it sooner or later. Supply a few crushed oats, also a millet spray and a leaf of lettuce occasionally. It is no use giving Budgerigars a large drinker, as they take very little water; every third day let this consist of equal parts of Dinneford's magnesia and water, so long as the voidings are not watery—on intermediate days lightly colour the drinking water with Parrish's chemical food, and keep a piece of cuttlebone in the cage. On the one hand, if the feather dropping is continued for any lengthy period, and plumage renewal is very slow, I am afraid the trouble is constitutional; time will show. If the bird is infested with insects at all, dust with Keating's or some other innocuous insecticide.

Sugar Birds and Waxbills.

Dad.—(1) Feed the sugar birds on a sop prepared with condensed milk, boiling water, a little liquid malt, and crumbled sponge, also supply ripe fruit ad lib., and if it cares for them one or two mealworms per day or small spiders when available. (2) The anointing of the bald parts of your Dufresne's Waxbill is merely to keep the skin soft and pliant. Supply this bird liberally with any green food it will eat freely, also Canary, white and small Indian millet seeds, as well as giving it a spray of millet occasionally. A spray of blighty foliage, from rose or fruit trees, or any non-poisonous herbage and clean cuttlebone should be continually in the cage. Encourage it to take a bath regularly. Keep its bowels moving freely by occasional doses of Dinneford's magnesia, and as a tonic lightly colour the drinking water on other days with chemical food. The plumage will probably be entirely at the moult, at any rate you must keep it caged separately till it is.

All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

What Parrot? (C. Bury).—You give me no idea as to the size of the bird, but it is undoubtedly a Blue-fronted Amazon. In such case, it will talk, but you must give it time to settle down and become accustomed to you, and avoid scaring it by sudden movements in its vicinity. It will pick up what it hears—words and calls—and you can teach it by constant repetition of words and small sentences when it is quiet and restful. An old bird has the legs very scaly, and the scales are coarse and horny. Your details seem to indicate a youngish bird at any rate. Diet: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuit, and as tit-bits a little boiled potato, carrot, turnip, and such like, but without gravy or other flavourings. A pinch of grit should be added to the daily supply of seed, and clean cuttlebone be kept in the cage. Also it must either have regular access to water, or be permitted to quench its thirst two or three times daily.

A Feather Eater (J.E.G.).—I am sorry to say that once a bird assumes this habit it is usually difficult to keep in check or eradicate. Keep its blood as cool as possible by doses of Dinneford's magnesia—one teaspoonful in the daily supply (one ounce) of drinking water—say, every 3 or 4 days. The condition of the voidings (must not remain watery-loose) must regulate the period between the doses. Let the supply of fruit be a liberal one. Anoint all bare places with Spratt's "Pennakura," and also spray twice weekly with solution of quassia and fir tree oil, using them alternately. Keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in the cage and add a pinch of grit to the daily supply of seed. Only perseverance can effect either mitigation or cure.

Budgerigars not Breeding (Hope deferred).—There is no need for despair. Budgerigars are easy to breed, but at the same time they do not settle down as quickly as Canaries. Most certainly, do not clear out for even if nothing is done this season, they are certain to breed next; I am of opinion, however, that you will have eggs and young at no distant date—there's plenty of time between now and end of November. Hang up another two or three husks so that there will be plenty of choice. Supply a few oats, also leaf of fresh lettuce—continue the supply of seed in grass. If they are last season (1910) birds it is better for you that they do not commence too soon. I do not care for birds breeding before they are twelve months old and separate the sexes to prevent it. Keep a piece or two of cuttlebone hanging in the aviary—a little patience and your hopes will be realised.

[We much regret being unable, owing to the "copy" having gone astray, to give this week the answers to the British Bird Queries. Where possible, duplicates of the answers will be sent to querists direct through the post.—Editor.]

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

P. C.—Canary died of ulcerative inflammation of the bowels. A too dry condition of the food would not induce this disease amongst your birds; it must be brought about by mineral or vegetable poisons (fungoid), which gain access to the food; there is nothing contagious, the whole trouble arising from the same source. Give daily for a time a little Condy's fluid in the drinking water.

P. V. D. H.—I did not receive your bird until mid-day post on Monday, consequently the remains were very much decomposed, and unfit for examination. Should another die, please send it along by letter post, and I will report to you by return.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Open Season in Norfolk (T. Clarke).—The catching season in Norfolk opens on September 1st, and closes on March 1st. In several districts, however, catching is prohibited on Sundays during the above period. The Goldfinch and Bearded Reedling (Tit) are, with a few other species, protected all the year round. A copy of the latest Wild Bird Act for any district can be obtained by sending a request, accompanied by two penny stamps, to Messrs. Wyman, Ltd., Printers, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.

F. F. Show July 8th, in Wycliffe Hall, an ideal room for a bird show. The entries came up well considering the bad season some members have had, the Yorkshires as usual making the best show, amongst them some very fine birds. Mr. F. Elliott secured special for best Yorks. in show. The Norwich seem to be gaining ground, several new exhibitors putting birds down; the features of this section were the increase in size, and the greater number of yellows shown. Mr. A. Bailey secured spl for best Nor. The British made a fine show, including Mr. P. Walsh's noted Chaffinch, winner of 30 first prizes. Taking the show throughout, the exhibits were of a very high order. Messrs. Dunford and J. R. Webster acted as stewards, and they, along with our genial secretary, Mr. A. Hobson, had everything well in hand. The attendance throughout the day was very good. BOURNEMOUTH C.B.A.

Very successful members' show held Albert Restaurant on July 5. The arrangements were carried out by the hon. sec., Mr. W. O. Brooke, assisted by an energetic committee. The young yellow and buff Nor. classes were well filled, and several youngsters of type and quality were staged that will doubtless give a good account of themselves later on. Over 60 birds were staged. No prize money was given, the entry fee of 2d. per cage going towards the expenses of the association. Prize cards were awarded. Special prize (by Mr. A. Tuck) for best young Yorks. was won by Mr. L. Bousfield with a smart youngster. Messrs. Kirby and Harris won spls. for Norwich (by the chairman, Mr. G. W. Jones). The classes were ably dealt with by Mr. W. Russell-Wyatt, who very kindly gave the association his services, and whose awards were well received. A hearty vote of thanks, proposed by the Chairman, seconded by the hon. sec., being unanimously accorded him (also to the donors of specials). The Hon. Sec. said he hoped Mr. Wyatt would rejoin the association. Mr. Wyatt stated that he did not see his way to become an active member, but would be happy to be an honorary member, which was received with applause.

HULL C.B.S.

F.F. Show, July 8th. Entries were not so numerous as in some previous years, no doubt owing to the very indifferent breeding season the majority of the members have experienced, but the quality was grand. Mr. W. H. Moore (Grimsby) judged Nor., and Mr. Jesse Calam Yorks. Mr. W. Clews (Grimsby), the Mule and Brit. judge, telegraphing that he would not be able to come, Mr. Geo. Harland kindly officiated. BLAYDON AND DIST. C.B.S.

At our first feather show, held July 15, we had a fair number of entries, a good increase on last year. The Norwich were strong in numbers and quality; in fact, some thought it one of the best shows for young Norwich seen in the North for some time.

WALLSEND & MID-TYNE C.B.S.

Nest feather show held in Club Room, July 8th, turned out a great success. By far the largest yet held by the Wallsend society, the entries coming well to 100. The keenness was shown by the extra attendance of members and friends, the "gate" realising more than what was allowed to purchase gold medal for the silver cup winner, and of which, after close competition, Mr. Matfin, a new member, was declared the victor. The large number of Norwich and Borders gave the judge, Mr. T. Robson (of Newcastle), a tight job, for those were hot classes, and it was noticed that he spent a long time in choosing the winner, which met with general approval. Several of the winners at South Shields the previous Saturday were present, the cards being reversed.

CLAPHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

F.F. Show, Avondale Hall, Clapham, on 14th July, and although the quality was good throughout, the classes were, on the whole, small. In the Canary section Messrs. Mazzoni, Masters, Yeoman, Thorpe, Britton, and Warley staged some excellent birds. Mr. Mazzoni's Linnet-Bullie was in the pink of condition, and was very much admired. The British bird section was chiefly accounted for by Messrs. Sexton, Coe, Askew, and Vale. A couple of capital Siskins were exhibited by Mr. Sexton, while Mr. Askew's Chaffinch looks like being a topper. We also liked Mr. Coe's Yellow Bunting immensely, it being of capital size and well marked. Mr. Vale's Grey Wagtail was perfection itself. The foreign class contained a couple of sweet Gold-Crested Waxbills, but unfortunately they were two hens, and the judge (Mr. Frostick) did not believe in the well-worn saying, "Every two is a pair," and they had to put up with being "wrong classed." A good number of members and friends visited the show, and Mr. Askew, in the unavoidable absence of the Hon. Sec., Mr. Priest, until late in the evening, carried out the arrangements in his usual style, assisted by Messrs. Sandy and Wildbore. Messrs. Robson and Frostick judged, and their awards gave general satisfaction.

GLASGOW (Queen's Park) CLUB.

Annual first feather show in the Marie Stuart Halls, Crosshill, Glasgow, on 8th July, was an unqualified success. The Plainheads were a good bit above the average, and the judge, Mr. Wm. Hitchison, had his work cut out in spotting the winners, which we are pleased to chronicle he did in a masterly fashion, even though it was his first appearance as a judge. New blood, too, is sadly wanted in this as well as other varieties in the "province of Scotland." Borders, Yorks, A.O.V. and Mules made up the show, and were handled by Mr. C. Campbell, whose awards were also received with favour. Mr. Heggie, the genial secretary, had the arrangements well in hand, and everything passed off as merry as wedding bells.

Sunderland C.B.A. Challenged to a Supper.

Sir,—The Hetton-le-Hole and District C.B.S hereby challenge the members of the Sunderland C.B.A. to a show of Norwich Canaries for a supper and a night's jollification, the losers to pay for the supper. Date, place, judge, and other arrangements can be fixed up as soon as I receive a reply from the Sunderland secretary, so as to suit the convenience of both parties. The affair to be a genuine friendly go.

A New Cage Bird Society for Adwick-le-Street and District.

Sir,—We have just formed a society to be called the Adwick-le-Street and District Cage Bird Society—open to fanciers for membership within a radius of ten miles. The meetings are to take place on the last Saturday in each month at six o'clock, at the Foresters' Arms, Adwick-le-Street. The next meeting is to be held on July 29. We have commenced with a membership of twenty, and we look like having a very good society.

The Twite-Goldfinch Hybrid.

Sir,—I feel sure that readers of Cage Birds will be sorry to hear of my ill-luck with Goldfinch-Twite Hybrids. I had one young bird hatch out yesterday (July 12) out of five eggs. It was under a hen Canary which I have been breeding with for the past six years, and she has reared every bird hatched, so you can judge what my feelings were like when I went to look into the cage at five o'clock this morning to find the young one out on the floor of the cage with the ends of the wings and claws eaten off! I am sending the young one on to your Mr. Weston to have a look at. The Twite is very eager to go to nest again, so I hope for better luck next time.

E. Southwood.

[I am much obliged to Mr. Southwood for sending the dead nestling on to me. Of course, a youngster but a few hours old affords one no possible chance of learning anything as to its precise parentage, but I notice that this nestling is very light in colour, which is contrary to my own experiences in Hybrid breeding (i.e., outside the region of light Mules). I sincerely hope Mr. Southwood may yet rear some Twite-Goldfinch Hybrids to maturity.—G. E. Weston.]

Some Hints for Mule-breeders.

Sir,—My idea with regard to Mule breeding is to breed them in a cage. The aviary, I consider, is too large for the British birds. The Linnet and the Goldfinch you will find will not take to the hen Canary all at once. Perhaps this is because British birds do not seem to understand when the hen bird is calling for the cock bird. Whereas, if the pairs are in a cage they are better able to breed, and are the easier to take out if they fight. If you have not had some experience with British birds, it is very hard to breed Mules. For instance, you may have some luck and get some young Mules; they will go on all right until they are fourteen days old, but it is then the trouble begins. They are more forward than young Canaries. Some young Mules are out of their nest before they are fifteen days old, and this is where the benefit of the cage comes in. A large number of young Mules die because of this trouble. I am sorry to say that two hens out of every four will not feed their young birds when the latter leave the nest too soon. If they keep to the nest until they are twenty days old, it is better for them and there will be a chance of your rearing them. It is a good help for anyone who is going in for muling to enter for Linnet contest singing. Then when you get your birds into condition you will have a chance of getting some Mules. The best cage, I think, is about 15 inches long, 12 inches high, and 9 inches broad, with loose fronts and false bottoms. One way of feeding is Spanish canary seed, with a little German rape seed. Soft food: one egg (boiled hard for about 15 minutes), which, when cool, chop up fine; then mix one tea biscuit and one teaspoonful of maw seed in with it. Give the birds two teaspoonfuls of this twice a day. You can add some more seed by way of tit-bits, such as dandelion, niger, gold of pleasure, maw, and crushed hemp. Mix all these seeds together. Give your Linnet and Canary these seeds when you put them together for breeding. Give them two teaspoonfuls of these seeds every other day; but put the seeds in a separate pot in the cage. The best green food I have found is young dandelion leaves, young lettuce and chick-weed. Some breeders do not give their young Mules any until the birds are three days old. I prefer to give it them as soon as they are hatched. Do not forget to put the egg food into the cage when your hens have been sitting for thirteen days. I have had three years' experience in Linnet Mule breeding, and I have had some good luck. I have done some Linnet singing as well, and when I see my Linnets in condition in March I put them to the hens I am going to breed with. Sometimes a Linnet will not take to the hen you have put in; in that case take it out, and put it with another hen, if you have any more. It is always best to have one or two hens in stock, so that you can run two hens with one Linnet. Mule breeding is not, it should be remembered, a game of chance, but hard work.

A Recipe for Birdlime Wanted.

Sir,—I shall be glad if any of your readers will kindly give me through your columns a good recipe for bird-lime. I am a regular reader of Cage Birds, having been in the Canary Fancy some years. I have obtained much valuable information from its columns regarding Canaries, etc.

An Appeal for the Widow and Orphans of a Fancier.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to renew the appeal that has been made on behalf of the widow and orphans of Mr. J. Coulson? Mr. Coulson was a working-man fancier, and his circumstances entirely prevented his making any provision for his family; and if some generous-hearted fanciers would send me a donation, however trifling, they would be doing good in a very urgent case, and I should be extremely thankful.

Cricket Matches Booming in the Fancy.

Sir,—Members of the Bradford East O.S. should attend the meeting on Saturday afternoon next, July 22 (during the progress of the F.F. Show) to arrange details and select a representative team to meet Manningham C.B.A. in a game of cricket on Saturday week, July 29. Our Manningham friends have kindly arranged for a field off Scotchman Road, Manningham, and although neither side will contain any budding County Colts, spectators can rest assured that a good afternoon's sport, in its truest sense, will be enjoyed by all. For my own part, though, I have very painful recollections of my last match, and I have no doubt that many of those who indulged in the Windhill and Rest of the Fancy match will feel likewise, still the opportunity of taking part in these friendly fixtures, one society with another, tends towards a lofty ideal, and they are most beneficial from any society's standpoint. If the challenges issued to and by the different societies in the Union are any criterion, it looks as though a young cricket league could be formed! But I had better say no more, else there may be a strike of the feathered tribe, as a protest against neglectful masters. This is the age of strikes, and we must be very careful, or else our only bit of consolation may be swept away from us.

Non Colour-fed Classes.

It is a Mistaken Idea re Colour-feeding?

Sir,—Let me say at once that I have no intention of reviving the perennial discussion on colour feeding and non-colour-fed classes. But there is one stock argument which every writer against the practice seems to trot out which is weak and puerile to a degree, though it may unconsciously bear some little weight with the unthinking fancier, and which I will once more try to show is quite absurd. Your correspondent last week puts the idea in the words: "I have tried colour-feeding myself, but find that the birds want more personal attention than the working-man is able to give them." Now, your old readers may remember that some years ago, when you took a plebiscite on the colour-feeding question, this idea was given as a principal objection to the practice, when I commented upon it in words to this effect: If the trouble of colour-feeding is a really valid obstacle, why do these fanciers breed birds at all, seeing that they require far more attention all through the breeding season than they need during the moult? To reduce the argument to the fewest possible words, so long as young are in the nests fresh egg food should be prepared and supplied at least twice, and better still three times, a day, whereas to colour feed to the highest degree of perfection egg food with colour added is only required once a day during the moult. Surely the difference should be patent to the least critical reader. Natural colour classes have been tried in the past and found wanting, largely, if not chiefly, through the system of improving colour which your correspondent suggests. Still, times and manners change, and it may possibly be that such classes would succeed better now. Time and trial alone can tell.

The Curious Case of a Young Canary.

Sir,—During my second round of breeding this season I found one of the young birds one afternoon under the nest almost dead. Fortunately, I use the Jerome breeding cage (with a platform), so it did not fall far. I breathed on it, holding it in my hands till it revived; then put it into a nest where there were young about its own age, and the hen reared it. It is now fully fledged, and five weeks old, but cannot put its head under its wing at night, though I have seen it try to, and the head hangs down in front when it sleeps. I shall be glad to know whether any of your readers have had birds similarly affected, also whether there is a chance it may recover as it gets older. It is healthy, eats and flies well, and has attempted to sing. I wish Cage Birds every success.

An Improved Front for Roller Canary Contest Cages.

Sir,—Having seen the above front, I should like to give my opinion on it. I have no doubt it will do most of what Mr. Pattison claims for it, but before we alter the present show cage we must look at both sides of the question. As small as the cost is, I don't think it will be an improvement. We all know that birds will always perch on the highest position, and the top of the seed and water tins being flat will make extra perches for them, and the water will get fouled and the covers will never look clean. As regards putting sponges for the birds in the water tin when travelling, I think they will be best left at home—it will be nice sport for the birds to try to pull them through the holes! The Roller show cages have been costly, for already we have had four. I shall make this fourth my last. I should like to see the cage that would suit every Roller fancier! "Schoolmaster" writes pretty strongly about the minority that attends the meetings. No matter what club he may go to, he will find it is the minority that has to do the work and has to take the blame. As far as making them adopt it, "Schoolmaster" and the minority will not make me adopt something that I find is of no benefit to the birds. I hope "Schoolmaster" will use his proper name, as much can be said under a nom-de-plume.

F. Oldroyd.

Sir,—In your issue of July 8 there is a letter from "Schoolmaster" lauding the inventive genius of Mr. Pattison, of the B.R.C.C., and warning the Committee of the B.R.C.C. of reprisals, should they not agree with him that Mr. Pattison's invention was a long-felt want. May I ask "Schoolmaster" why he writes to you under a pen-name? Surely there is nothing to be ashamed of in the expression of an honest opinion? However, I will try and give ease to "Schoolmaster's" mind and inform him that neither the members of the B.R.C.C. who attend the monthly meetings, nor those of the Committee of the B.R.C.C. have any wish other than that the desires of the majority of the B.R.C.C. shall prevail, and become law. At two monthly meetings Mr. Pattison's proposition to alter the existing cage front of the B.R.C.C. standard contest show cage was thoroughly gone into, and did not find favour with any one member present. But, even if any alteration had been approved, there is no power to alter the standard cage front without the consent of the patentee, who, moreover, has the right to bring action for any infringement of his patent.

My Views Upon Some British Birds.

Sir,—In dealing with this subject, it will be my object to classify the various species in their wild state, and to convey an idea of bird life under natural conditions. It is thought by many that the less populated and very wild open country is more frequented by birds, but this is not necessarily so. The observant fancier will have a good idea what class of bird to expect when he sees the surrouudings. For instance, in wooded valleys where the undergrowth is thick and consists mostly of wild fruits, blackberries, etc., he would look for Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and some of the Warblers (Blackcap, etc.). The more open country, where thistles, dock, teasel, and dandelion are common (and there are fields, of course, where mustard has been grown), the seedeaters will be seen in hundreds. I have seen 45 Linnets caught at once in a mustard field. The Thrush, Blackbird, Chaffinch, Greenfinch, Hawfinch, etc., are also found near the haunts of the afore-mentioned birds. I will start with the Blackbird, so called from its colour, a shiny black in the case of the cock and rather browner in the case of the hen. A cock in good condition has a beautiful orange beak. He is a regular rake, and ought to have a latch-key, whistling out loudly when all other birds have gone to sleep. There was one in Bolton that was more white than black. It nested near to a Thrush that was well known in the district for whistling, and they were a conspicuous pair. Strange to say, there was caught the season after a Blackbird with wing flights white and four white feathers in the tail, besides a splashed neck. I suppose it was the same breed. It was sold for three shillings, and an hour afterwards for five shillings. No mistake, it was a beauty. The Thrush is another loud-whistling bird. In colour it is brown, with speckled breast. The cock has grey under the wings, and is smaller than the hen; the hen is brownish under the wings. When selecting the birds out of the nest for hand-rearing, pick the smallest. Leave the robust ones; they are hens. I once saw five nests in a hedge within a few yards of each other—25 blue, brown, speckled eggs altogether. The nest is lined with clay. The Lark is well known. The nest is difficult to find. Observe that the cock, when rising to sing, never starts from near the nest. He also drops a long way off, and runs to it. This species is very destructive to peas just sprouting; they like the tender shoots. The Goldfinch is one of the handsomest of our British birds, with his red blaze, grey breast, and nut-brown back with yellow wing bars. There is no more imposing scene among birds than a dozen cocks together feeding. They come from the woods to fields where there is plenty of thistle and teasel. They are very shy, but one can often get very close. The Bullfinch is another British beauty. It has a black cap, a red breast, and a slate-grey back. Some specimens have light bars on the wings. Bullfinches are very docile when steady, and they are soon tamed. After a week or two in a cage they will take tit-bits from one's fingers. Their piping is low and sweet, many of them being able to learn tunes. Along with the Goldfinch—commonly called the Redcap in the provinces—they are much valued for hybrid breeding. Very few fanciers have much luck in this respect, so I should advise would-be hybrid breeders to start with something easier, so as not to be disappointed. The Linnet is very common in most parts of Great Britain. The brown one is mostly valued for its song and for Mule breeding. The grey Linnet and the green Linnet (Greenfinch) are often caught and caged. Redpolls are often taught to draw their own water and seed. They are very amusing to watch, as they keep treading on the chain as they draw the water up. They are very crafty when letting it back again, for they don't let the little seed wagon go back with a bump and spill the seed. All the Linnets are very cheap. I don't know whether mine is an exceptional district for Linnets, but I know one can have the pick of fifty birds for a few coppers. Another interesting bird that is often kept for a pet is the Woodpecker. To find its nest, look for a decayed tree. I remember a party of boys (of which I was one) finding a likely nesting place; in fact, we had seen the birds flying about a certain decayed willow tree very often, so we investigated matters. None was willing to climb the tree (it was too rocky) to get the eggs, if there should be any. At last one boy got his hand in the hole, but it came out again rather quickly, though not half as fast as he would have liked. He said he always thought Woodpeckers had sharp beaks to peck holes in trees—and boys' hands!

Suggested Conference of Lancashire Linnet-singing Clubs.

Sir,—I have been asked by the members of the Wigan Linnet Club to ask secretaries of Linnet Clubs in Lancashire to have a joint meeting and fix dates for contests in Wigan, Leigh, Warrington, Blackburn, Salford, and Westhoughton, so that we do not arrange contests on the same dates. I hope we can pick some date for this meeting and decide where we shall meet, as I am in favour of meeting at any of the club-houses, for I think it will be a lot better for all Linnet Clubs if they can arrange dates for contests for next year.

Wild-Bird Life.

The Linnet in Summer.

The glorious summer days are passing all too quickly, although at this time of the year the hours of daylight are many, and it is a long time from early dawn until night is actually upon us. Between sunset and sunrise it is never really dark, and one can see to move about with ease in the open. All this time bird life is resting, if not actually sleeping, and although each individual has spent many hours of activity in the open, yet they are easily disturbed if one approaches their roosting-place; and at the first streak of light in the east bright little chirps and twitterings can be heard from various directions. The wild birds' summer need be one of sunshine and pleasure, for they have much to contend with in winter. The joy of living in the feathered world appears to the writer to be in excess of that of the animal kingdom generally. Watch the Swallows and the Swifts, see how they cleave the air in mad flight, twisting and wheeling as quickly as the eye can follow, twittering and screaming in sheer delight and enjoyment. Or take the daily life of a common Finch, say the Linnet; food is abundant, companions are many, and in the hedgerow, snugly hidden among the rambling woodbine, is a brood of little ones, whose calls are not too exacting, the feeding of them simply helping to fill up the long summer days. The Linnet is considered to be a gregarious bird only in the winter months, when flocks of all kinds are common; yet occasionally one meets with several nests during the summer within a very limited area; so much so that they really appear to be part of a flock that has settled down in one spot to nest in company. One hardly knows if this is the case, or if it is such a suitable place for nesting that pair after pair take possession as their time arrives. From many years' observation and noting the doings of wild birds, the writer has found that these gatherings generally occur upon commons and heaths, among the furze and brambles found growing upon such places, more than the tangled growth of the hedgerows. It is true that occasionally one may find two or three nests in one hedge bordering a field where the wild seeds that these birds are fond of grow freely; but along the same hedge one may find quite as many nests of the Greenbird, and probably more, as these latter are doubtless the commonest of our Finches, and nest freely in any place suitable for small birds. In the intervals of attending upon his family, the Linnet loves to perch within hearing distance, and sing to his mate and young ones.

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE

A Millionaire's Extraordinary Statements

The Cage Bird Hobby versus Money.

Notes by the Secretary.

The latest supporter of those who would entirely abolish the keeping of pet birds in cages is Mr. Walter Winans, the millionaire. This gentleman, in a letter to "The Throne and Country," says that he "cannot understand any human being caring to be within hearing of a poor bird singing in a cage. It is the most piteous sound imaginable." Then he goes on: "It is infinitely more cruel, in my opinion, to keep a bird in a cage, than to shoot pigeons out of a trap, or even rabbit coursing; in the one case (even in the case of an escaped wounded bird) it dies within a few days, whereas the poor caged birds linger, often for years, and on fine summer days they keep ceaselessly moving from side to side to get out."

Has Mr. Winans, whose heart is so moved to pity at the sound of a cage-bird's song, ever thought for a moment of the amount of suffering that is crowded into the "few days" during which a wounded bird is slowly dying, or of the agony of a bagged rabbit vainly trying to outrun death at the jaws of a whippet? Surely not, or he could not write in such manner.

Of course such balderdash could only be written by those who know nothing of the conditions under which birds are kept as pets by thousands upon thousands of bird-lovers, but these are the people who would wreck our hobby, and they will do it if we do not look out, for the opinion of a millionaire, backed up by his money, counts for much in the eyes of some of our law-givers. "Ipse dixit," and it must be so! It is in the power of readers of "Cage Birds" to show that they also have opinions in the matter, and their time is now. By sheer force of numbers it could be done in a week, but it is only by this means that it can be done at all. Send along your subscriptions for membership and make CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE 50,000 strong. We shall then be able effectively to combat these people.

A Well-known Ornithologist's Views.

The "Avicultural Magazine" for July, the editor of which is the well-known ornithologist Mr. J. Lewis Bonhote, M.A., F.Z.S., etc., has a review of the recent pamphlet of the Humanitarian League, and I reproduce three of the paragraphs. It will be seen that the Editor of the Avic. Mag. agrees with our own review, published in our issue of June 3.

"This pamphlet, needless to say, gives but one aspect to the case, and that aspect painted in colours so lurid that we feel inclined to doubt the authenticity of some of the statements, and are quite certain that, even if true in isolated instances, which we do not for one moment admit, they do not represent a fair and average account of the majority of bird-dealers' shops. Were we so disposed, we could, under the same title, "The other side of the bars," draw a much happier and perfectly true picture of the "miserable creatures" singing not "for relief," but from full enjoyment of health and vigour. We could tell of caged birds living in luxury and happiness to an age when, under natural conditions, they would long have surrendered their life to the stress of Nature, or, again, we could show the birds mating and bringing up their broods in full ecstasy of health and happiness and relieved from the ever-present sense of danger and the necessity of hunting early and late to feed ravenous nestlings. Yet, as every fancier knows, all this goes on "the other side of the bars."

But the Humanitarian may reply: Few birds lead this ideal existence compared with the thousands that suffer as we have described. To that the reply is, that never having kept a bird or mixed with those who have, they know nothing of the happy and well-cared-for birds in private homes.

I am quite sure there is no bird-keeper who is not a bird-lover, and therefore just as anxious to put down cruelty as the most rabid Humanitarian, and the reason why bird-fanciers have not taken in hand the so-called "cruelties" of the dealer is probably because, as practical men, we know that such cruelties are largely exaggerated."

Our Free Booklet.

I have still some of each of the sixpenny pamphlets on British Bird Culture and on Canary and Hybrid Culture, and, as long as they last one of either will be sent gratis to all new members applying for a copy at the time of joining. Those of the old members who have not yet had a copy may receive one of those reserved for them on sending a penny stamp for postage. Only one copy of either book can be sent free either to new members or old, and when the stock in hand is exhausted I may not be able to get a fresh supply, so that those who would make sure of getting one of these useful pamphlets should send on their applications with their membership fee without delay

Place Aux Dames.

In accordance with some suggestions received since the publication of our paragraph of last week referring to Vice-Presidentships it has been decided to fix the annual subscription of Vice-Presidents at half a guinea, and to establish, for those who are willing to subscribe an amount of a guinea or more, a roll of Patrons of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE.

I am very pleased to register as the first of our Patrons a lady member, Miss C. M. E. Hill, of Exeter. It has been a very gratifying item in our progress that quite a large proportion of members joining belong to the gentler sex, and it is entirely in the fitness of things that a lady has headed our list of Patrons. If the opponents of pet bird-keeping could see our membership list I think they would get a notion that cage-bird keeping is not quite the "acted blasphemy" which they claim it to be.

I trust that the example set by Miss Hill will be followed by many of our readers who are in a position to assist CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE in its work by subscribing, either as Patrons or Vice-Presidents, an amount which is beyond the purses of the great majority of members who in their own humbler way are just as keen in the pursuit of a delightful hobby which gives pleasure alike to peasant and to peer.

THE SUBSCRIPTION AND THE BADGES.

The subscription to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE is one shilling annually, and the badges sixpence or one shilling. The sixpenny badges are in three forms: (1) a button for coat lapel, (2) a pendant for watch chain, (3) a brooch for lapel, cycling cap, or for lady's wear. The badges at one shilling each are mounted in 9-carat rolled-gold, and are in two forms only: (1) A pendant for watch chain, (2) a brooch for a lady or for cycling cap or coat lapel. Members should distinctly state which form they prefer.

PATRONS.

Ladies or gentlemen who are in sympathy with the objects of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE may give practical expression to that sympathy by becoming PATRONS of the LEAGUE and either making a lump sum donation to its funds or subscribing an annual amount of a guinea or upwards. One-half of such donation or subscription may be allotted to any individual object of the LEAGUE.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The qualification for Vice-Presidentship is an annual subscription of not less than half a guinea, and, as in the case with ordinary membership subscriptions, one-half of this may be alloted either to the Literature Fund, the Defence Fund, or towards the purchase of special prizes ta be given at any show nominated by the subscriber. Failing any such special allocation, the subscriptions will be devoted to the development and progressive work af the LEAGUE, to advertising its objects, and promoting its ideals.

MORE VIEWS OF MEMBERS.

How Members Keep their Birds.

Sir,—I have visited two of our members, Messrs. Mudd and Pettit, and find their birds in beautiful condition. When birds are looked after like this I am sure they never worry for freedom or even think of it. These members are working very hard for CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, and it is through them that I joined. I shall do the same myself for our society.

Some of Our Juvenile Members.

Sir,—I am sending you a photograph of my little juvenile group of members, and myself, all wearing our LEAGUE badges. From left to right, the children are: Donald Robins, aged 9; Wilfrid Bennett, aged 5; Sydney Stiles, aged 4; Bernard Norton, aged 5½; and Reginald Bennett, aged 6½. At our local show Robins took 1st with a Linnet, and Norton 1st with a Redpoll.

A Willing Worker.

Sir,—I am glad to see that our LEAGUE is progressing so favourably, also the kind offer of free books. I would be pleased to receive "British Bird Culture" if you have a copy left. I consider it a good idea to distribute pamphlets of the Aims and Objects of the League, as I find that in Belfast there are scores who have not heard of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, but when I explain to them the objects of the LEAGUE it is a universal opinion that the LEAGUE is just what is wanted to protect the poor man from the moneyed faddist. I would be pleased, therefore, if you would send me some of your pamphlets to distribute to people who own birds, for I come across a lot in the course of my work who, if given one with a few words of advice, would most likely join; but unless they have something to remind them of it, forget about it until they see me again. If, when they get home amongst their birds, they find one of the LEAGUE bills in their pocket, they would be reminded of the one and only League that will protect them and their feathered pets. I would like about a hundred of your papers if you could spare them, and will give one of them and lend a copy of CAGE BIRDS, the best penny weekly, on condition that they pass them both on to some one who does not belong to the LEAGUE. I should like to see your badge as well worn as the Coronation favours—that is to say, hardly anyone without one. Hoping to hear of a large rush of recruits to the LEAGUE, and wishing it and yourself every success.

Belfast. J. SOMERS.

Sir,—My birds in outdoor aviaries number about forty—all British except three hen Canaries. Even if people live, as I do, right in the midst of wild birds, it is my opinion that they cannot be properly studied except in cages or aviaries. It is most remarkable to see the wild birds all around trying to get into my aviaries, even at this time of the year, midsummer.

An Active Member.

Sir,—As one of the early members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, I wish now to be also an active member, so I will be glad if you will please send me 250 circulars for distribution (I shall want more later on). In the course of my business I visit hundreds of families weekly, many of whom are bird-lovers like myself, and I wish to let them know of the LEAGUE and its aims and objects.

Sound Advice.

Sir,—I have been a bird-catcher and breeder for many years; in fact, ever since I was nine years of age, and never know of once sitting down to my own meals without first feeding my pets. I have had thousands of birds through my hands, and am pleased that we have got such a splendid LEAGUE to protect our hobby against the attacks of the faddist. I shall be pleased to help in the great work of distributing the LEAGUE pamphlets, and at our forthcoming show nothing will please me more than to see all our members wearing their CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE badges. I hope that before long there will not be a single bird fancier in all the British Isles that is not a member. They should not put it off, but join now, and keep the ball rolling.

A Clever Redpoll.

One morning I was away catching Redpolls about a mile from the house, and a wire got loose. My Redpoll got out, and flew away. I thought I had lost it, but to my surprise when I got home it was in the cage.—David Paterson (age 13), Crossford House, Crossford, via Carluke.

*A Faithful Blackbird.

George Stephenson, the engineer, when a poor boy, was very fond of Blackbirds. One he had taken early from the nest became so fond of him that it would come when he called it, and every night it went to roost on the head of his bed, and it would not sleep anywhere else. What was most singular was that this Blackbird would fly away to the woods in the spring, there build its nest, and rear its young; and then, when its work was done, return to its old home and master for the remainder of the year—a faithful bird indeed.—H. Wilkinson (age 14), 14, Chesilton Road, Fulham, London.

A Clever Mimic.

A lady once had a very clever Cockatoo, called "The Doctor." When his mistress was feeding her poultry and all the hens and chickens and Turkeys and Pigeons were eating their food, "The Doctor" was seen circling in the air, and giving the shrill cry of a Hawk. The poultry, very much frightened, ran away at once; the hens clucking to their chickens, the Turkeys crouching, and the Pigeons flying. Then "The Doctor" changed his cry to peals of laughter, and flew to a high tree; then it perched on a hen-coop and said, as it choked with laughter, "You'll be the death of me."—Sent by Mary Ford (age 13), "Daphne," Elms Avenue, Eastbourne.

*A Friend in Need.

A Redbreast was mentioned lately in "Science Gossip" as doing a deed of kindness towards a young Starling one bitterly cold morning. The Starling had left the nest, and was sitting frightened and shivering in a cellar, where it had crept, too weak and hungry to fly. In vain kindly hands offered it bread; it refused all food, till a little hungry Robin came on his daily visit to the house, and spied the baby bird sitting on one leg calling its absent mother. Off he went, and soon came darting back with a worm, which was gratefully accepted. When the beggar-bird had been fed, both flew away.—Sent by William Sharples (age 14), 16, Dixon Street, Waterhead, Oldham.

My Favourite Canaries.

The Norwich Plainhead and the Lizard.

By W. REID (Sunderland).

The ground colour of the bird should be as rich and solid as possible, and the denser the black in the flights and tail the better. The beak, legs, and toes also should be dark; and these are points that I think a great deal of, for although light toes do not prevent a bird from being an exhibition specimen, they tell against it to a certain extent, and, in my opinion, the bird possessing them cannot be termed a tip-top specimen, no matter how good in other respects, for it has not the same finished appearance of the good bird with dark toes.

Size also is of some importance, on the principle that a big good bird will always beat a good little one. Yet I would not advise anyone to sacrifice any of the chief characteristics of the Lizard merely for the sake of size; therefore, when breeding for size, never lose sight of other and more necessary points.

Of course, the beginner will understand that Lizards are no more perfect in other respects than any other variety of Canary, and he must not expect when purchasing a bird to find it endowed with all the grand essentials of a show bird, for just as an otherwise decent Norwich may be a shade too long, or a little deficient in chest; or a Yorkshire a trifle stout, or perhaps a little flat on head, and so on, so will he find Lizards perhaps a little deficient in spangling, or maybe, irregularly rowed, or a bit pinched in cap, etc., and it is the breeder's duty to try to breed the faults out by careful mating, and thus get as near the ideal as possible. The nearest to the ideal, of course, gets the prize—at least, under a Lizard judge.

The Method of Pairing.

The method of pairing is the usual one, viz., yellow and buff; that is, gold and silver. The beginner should be satisfied with this pairing, for he does not want to dabble in the intricacies of double-yellowing and double-buffing until he has gained some experience, and then only when he has some special object in view, and knows for a fact that he has the right birds for the purpose. Double-yellowing and double-buffing indiscriminately (for no set purpose that is)—merely because one has sometimes seen it advocated in the Fancy Press—will most surely land one in trouble. The beginner would be well advised to stick to the recognised method as long as possible.

The general procedure is to pair a broken-capped bird to a clear-capped one. This method, as a rule, gives the best results; and you are more likely then to keep the recognised characteristics of the bird in your stock. If you breed too much from clear-capped birds alone you will probably find yourself producing birds that carry the cap too far over the head, termed over-capped; also white or bald-faced birds, that is, having the cheeks below the eyes; and round and under the beak are light instead of being dark. And if you breed a light feather or two in the flights or tail, you may as well shelve the bird at once, so far as exhibition purposes are concerned.

The beginner must understand that I am not condemning the pairing of two clear-capped birds in the sense that it should never be done. Far from it. I am merely warning him to avoid overdoing it, and the less he persists in pairing together two clear-capped birds bred from two clear-capped birds, season after season, the less liable will he be to produce birds with the faults I have mentioned above. Clear caps will be bred from the pairing of a broken cap to a clear cap, and two broken caps will also produce clear caps; and I have myself bred some really good capped birds from this latter pairing, even when one of the birds has had practically no cap at all. It will therefore be gathered that clear-capped birds bred thus are, when paired together, much less liable to the faults I have mentioned than those which are continually bred from two clear caps season after season.

An Abominable Habit.

When breeding Lizards the greatest possible care should be taken to prevent the parents from plucking the young, for this abominable habit seriously jeopardises one's prospects on the show bench. It appears sometimes to be a marked peculiarity with birds that are addicted to plucking that they should invariably commence to pluck the youngsters in the wrong place (that is, from your point of view) and the damage is generally done before you notice the fact. Thus a Norwich will sometimes commence operations by drawing all the tail feathers out, giving the young bird a little extra length just where you want it as short as possible, or a Yorkshire will probably commence at the breast and leave the tail severely alone, with the result that you have to tail the bird yourself if you wish for the little extra length that the adult tail gives. It is just the same with the Lizards, and unless the utmost care is taken you will sometimes find the backs of one or two of your most promising youngsters stripped quite bare, for it is generally the case that the best ones suffer most.

The plucking of a young Lizard is a far more serious matter than is the case with other varieties, for besides the weakening effect it has upon the young bird, it means that the light-tipped feathers come on the bird a moult too soon, thus spoiling whatever prospects it may have had of proving a show specimen.

In the Nest.

To make my meaning clear, I should explain that a Lizard in its nest feather has no spangle, although the rowing is there (and incidentally I may say that the birds with the most perfect rowing on their backs are the ones to keep your eyes upon for future exhibition purposes). The spangle comes with the first moult, at the conclusion of which the bird is in its most perfect plumage, be the specimen good, bad or indifferent. That is why they are termed one-year birds, meaning that they are in exhibition plumage for one year only (and personally I think this is one of the strongest possible reasons why a beginner should go in for this variety, for it does not matter how great a name an exhibitor may have, he has to breed new show birds each year, and if the beginner can start with a pair of good birds he has just the same chance of producing a tip-top specimen as the man who has bred and won with the variety for years).

The second moult, or, in other words, the third set of feathers, brings the light tips, when the bird loses its exhibition plumage. It will be seen at once how seriously it handicaps a Lizard to be plucked in the nest, for the new feathers that grow are really the ones that should under ordinary circumstances have come with the first moult, and the result is that in the case of a bird that has been plucked in the nest the first moult really brings the third set of feathers, which are those with the light tips.

A Difference of Opinion.

I am aware that some fanciers contend that when a bird has been plucked in the nest it does not moult the new feathers in the usual way, but I know differently, and if anyone needs convincing on this point just let him try the Lizards, which, by reason of this marked peculiarity in regard to the light-tipped feathers, are just the birds to prove it. Let it be understood, of course, that I am not alluding to young birds that are just on the point of breaking into the moult, and that may be plucked in the flight cages by other birds, for in this case the bird really has not time to grow new feathers before the moult is upon it. I think I have said sufficient to show that the strictest watch should be kept upon the young Lizards in order to avoid as far as possible any danger of their being plucked. Personally I always remove my own youngsters from their parents at the earliest possible opportunity, and transfer them either to another compartment, letting the parents feed them through the wired portion of the slide, or to nursery cages hung on the front of the breeding cage.

While on this subject I should say that there is a greater tendency at the present time to overlook these light-tipped feathers than in former years, for fanciers recognise the fact that Lizards are just as liable to lose a feather or two, through various causes, as any other variety, and you will sometimes see a bird with one or two light-tipped feathers standing at the top of the class. Some judges, however, will not have them, but go in wholly for birds that are sound in colour. I myself have had a bird which has had two or three light tips on the secondary flights, placed first under one judge, while another judge placed it third a week later, competing against the same bird. The judge told me straight that he had put it down simply because of the light tips. I am personally in favour of the latter course being adopted, for light tips undoubtedly spoil the appearance of the bird to a certain extent, and if birds with two or three light tips are allowed to stand in the money, those tipped to a greater extent cannot conscientiously be kept out, with the result that the beauty of the classes of Lizards at shows will considerably diminish, for breeders will not take the same great care of their birds when they know that even if the birds get plucked a little it will not matter.

It would be much better to have a limit placed upon these tippings, or, better still, make our ranks strong enough to warrant our asking societies to give us another class to take in young birds with a few tipped feathers and over-year birds. If we had such a class there would be no further reason for saying that the Lizard is a one-year bird only. I had intended giving a few notes on the management of the birds, and on preparing them for exhibition, etc., but I shall have to give them on some future occasion. In the meantime, if this paper should be the means of inducing more fanciers to take up the Lizard variety, and thus bring this beautiful bird more into popular favour, my object will have been attained. I have no hesitation in saying that as a variety of Canary for the new fancier to commence with, the Lizard Canary cannot be excelled, either as a show bird, stock bird, or songster; and should the beginner ever find himself in difficulties he has only to ask advice from the older breeders, any of whom will be only too pleased to help him, through the columns of CAGE BIRDS.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES O.S

22nd annual nest feather show, July 1, in the Chorlton Town Hall. The room is an ideal one for a show, having a splendid light and plenty of room. Although several classes had to be cancelled (Lancs., Lizs., Cinns., Bords., Sell., and For.), entries came up very well, totalling 182, an increase of 60 over last year, and the largest number since 1902. Yorkshires had 53 in 4 classes, and some very promising youngsters amongst them. Norwich also contained some very promising exhibits. The novice classes, although they were well looked after re specials, etc., were badly supported (why don't the novices show more?). There were, however, some very nice birds in these classes, the special for best bird in show going to a gem of a Norwich shown by Mr. J. A. Vint, and we wish him luck with it. The show was well patronised, and everything went off well. Mr. A. Hirst judged, and his awards were favourably received. The following are winners of specials: Mr. J. A. Vint, best team of 4 Canaries, also best in show; Mr. W. Fairhurst, best team 4 British, and Messrs. Club Reports.

PRESTON O.S.

Meeting held July 13. Business mostly with regard to big show in Nov. Decided to hold same in St. Wilfrid's Rooms, Corporation Street, close to the Public Hall. It is much more convenient and has a splendid light; in fact, it is quite an ideal room for a show. Messrs. Roe and Houlton were elected as judges, and the Green Canary Association patronage was applied for. Prize-money won at F.F. Show was paid, and the medals won, given the successful exhibitors, viz., Mr. T. Barton, in the novice section, and Messrs. Thompson and Marsh, equal, in the open section. A vote of thanks to Mr. Waring for judging was moved by the Chairman and carried unanimously.—J. P. Leeming, Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.S.

Meeting, July 11th, Market Coffee Tavern, Mr. J. H. Ford presiding over a large gathering. Every member was delighted to know that the F.F. show turned out a financial success. The Chairman presented the two silver cups. Winner of the Canary cup, Mr. T. Vanstone, was unable to be present, but sent a worthy substitute in his wife. Mrs. Vanstone, in returning thanks on behalf of her husband, said that he was sorry that business had kept him away that evening. His one ambition now was to breed another bird next year that would win the cup again so that it would become his own property. Mr. J. Jeffries received the British cup for most points, and suitably responded. To the schedule for open show several classes were added, bringing the total up to nearly 70. Two more new members were enrolled—Messrs. S. Prangle and F. Gully—and with a few more likely ones to come, the Swansea Society will still be able to claim to be the largest, most powerful, and active cage bird society in Wales. I should like to take this opportunity of thanking Mr. D. A. S. Longden for his kindness in judging the F.F. show, and for the able manner he performed his duties; also our worthy doorkeeper, Mr. J. Mock and other members who took part in the show.—S. H. George, Hon. Sec.

HOLYWOOD AND DIST. C.B.S.

There will be four solid silver cups, value £5 5s. each, for competition at the open show, Nov. 24th and 25th. The Mrs. Bruce cup for best young Canary bred, the McCammard-Shakelton cup for best young Norwich, and the J. K. Stephens cup for best young Yorks (all bred by local members). The Society's cup open for competition to all for the best young Yorks or Nor. Plainhead is to be won three years in succession, or four in all, before becoming the winner's own property. All birds to be the bona-fide property of the exhibitor. As our society is now in a very prosperous condition (having a substantial balance at the bank and a good list of specials), it is to be hoped our neighbours will give us a little better support than they did last year, for we are a young society that will do its utmost to give as good value as obtainable in Ireland. Seeing that we have been fortunate enough to get Mr. Mundell, of Bradford, to judge, we see no reason why our forthcoming show should not be a great success. The cups will be on exhibition in Sharman D. Neill's window (Donegall Place, Belfast) during the next month. All local fanciers and breeders cordially invited at our general meetings held in the Old Masonic Hall, Holywood, first Tuesday in every month—pleased to welcome any new members. Next meeting, 1st August; business of importance; all members please attend.—F. Cole, Hon. Sec.

GLASGOW AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Committee meeting held July 4th, Duncan's Restaurant. Chair occupied by President, Mr. R. B. Jarvie, before a good turn-out of members. Judges' correspondence was read, and the terms being considered suitable, the following gentlemen were unanimously decided upon: For Norwich Plainheads and Crests, Mr. W. B. Mackie (Aberdeen); for Borders, Mr. J. Craig (Brechin); for Yorkshires, Mr. J. W. Bruce (Coldstream); for British and Foreign birds, Messrs. L. J. Arrighi and A. Cochrane (Edinburgh). After a discussion it was decided to conform to the rules of the S.B.B. and M.C. regarding their cups and trophy, and the secretary was instructed to forward the necessary fee. Also decided, to increase prize money to 35s. per class, with entrance fee 2s. per bird, the same as formerly. Prize money to be 1st, 15s.; 2nd, 10s.; 3rd, 5s.; 4th, 3s.; and 5th, 2s. For some time past a number of the committee have been on the look-out for a more suitable hall, as the Drill Hall, Stirling Road, is considered to be in a bad position for drawing a "gate," and "gate money" has been the principal failing at past shows. The result is that a most suitable hall has been procured in one of the business thoroughfares of the city. This is the Crown Hall, Sauchiehall Street, an ideal hall from every point of view, being free from draught, and an even temperature can also be kept during the show. The committee fully expect to have a record gate, as the drawing powers of this hall should be treble that of the old one.—Fred. Bowman, Sec.

GLASGOW (West End) C.B.C.

Monthly meeting in Clarendon Hall, July 7th, Mr. H. Jamieson presiding over a good attendance. Classification for annual members' show: It was decided to call an extraordinary general meeting to discuss this. Two new members were enrolled, viz., William Lunn and David Ritchie. Business now being over, the members were entertained to a splendid lecture on the "Yorkshire Canary," by Mr. R. B. Gibb. This gentleman is a great admirer of the Yorkshire Canary, and is at the present time Hon. Secretary of the Yorkshire C.C. of Scotland, which is making great headway, and Mr. Gibb is working very hard to popularise the bird. In his opening remarks, he said he did not believe in purely paper written lectures; he preferred a lecture from just what one had really experienced as this led up to a good debate, and justified itself in giving everyone the chance of stating their opinion on the subject. First of all, he dealt with the comparison of the Scotch Yorkshire to that of the English Yorkshire. Taken on the whole, English birds were more nervy, of better quality, and truer to type. The Yorkshires of Scotland, in his opinion, were inclined to be too round and too heavy in the head, and too thick in the neck, shoulders far too broad and too squnre (this, he said, was a bad fault in the Yorkshire). A very animated discussion took place. Mr. Gibb having answered all very satisfactorily, the Chairman thanked him for the very interesting lecture he had given, and asked the members present to accord Mr. Gibb a very hearty vote of thanks, which they did very enthusiastically. With a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman, the evening was brought to a close.—W. Proudfoot, Sec. and Treas.

WEST STANLEY AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held July 15, Mr. W. Butler in chair. There was a very large turn-out of members. It was decided to have two judges for this annual show to be held on Jan. 20. The following were nominated for election: Messrs. W. Reid (Sunderland), T. Dixon (Bedlington), A. Brown (Gateshead), J. Hands (Ryton), W. P. Barnes (Grantham), J. Shepherd (Newcastle), W. Maddison (Newcastle), and J. Dixon (Wigton). During the evening we enrolled one new member and two for CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE.—W. Elliott, Sec.

KELTY AND BLAIRADAM C.B.A.

Meeting held July 11th, Mr. Jas. Stenhouse (President) in the chair. A letter was received from Scottish Crest Club granting their patronage. Stewards for the open show were appointed. Scotch: A. Cowan and A. Fotheringham. Bord.: J. Anderson and W. Purvis. Yorks: R. Hamilton and W. Johnston. Crests: Jas. Veitch and J. Hunter. Plainheads: T. Barclay and A. Ramsay. Brit.: A. Anderson and J. Cordery. Mr. Jas. Fotheringham spoke of the sad loss our Association had sustained through the death of Mr. John Chalmers.—A. Dickson, Sec.

GATESHEAD AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held July 12th, Mr. R. Tindle presiding over a good attendance. Letters were read from the specialist clubs re granting their patronage. The following new members were elected: Messrs. Lord (Dronston) and R. H. Gills (Felling). Classification for open show was decided at last general meeting, but members' classes were left over. These were then taken, and came in for a lively discussion, especially re novice classes. Members' hen classes for Norwich was made into 2—yellow and buff. This we think will meet with the approval of all members, as it has always been a strong class. The two hen classes were put on for the novice in Norwich and Yorkshire. Specials were promised for two of these. Will members who have not yet paid their subscriptions kindly forward same to secretary at the earliest opportunity?—A. Holden, Secretary and Treasurer.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting held July 6th, Wentworth Cafe, Pinstone Street, Mr. T. Hemming (President) in chair. Secretary informed meeting that our Hon. President, Mr. H. Barber, had kindly given £1 1s. for specials; also Mr. Memmott had given a silver butter knife and silver jam spoon, which have been won at our late nest feather show; Mr. P. Walsh is giving 5s. for most entries in British classes over both shows (donor barred). The committee thank these gentlemen, also other friends who have given specials. We were to have had a talk on Crests, introduced by Mr. J. W. Crookes, but he had intimated his inability to be present, and sent a promise to oblige us at some future date. The discussion on colour feeding was opened by Mr. Hemming and several other members took part. Most of the points re the successful colour feeding of birds were dealt with, and no doubt novices learned something to their advantage during the discussion. Seeing the last ramble was a success, it was decided to have another on July 29th, to Edwinstowe, situate in the heart of the Dukeries. Train leaves Sheffield (Midland Station) 1.15 p.m.; return fare, 1s. 9d. We trust as many members and friends as can will go; we are assured of a good time, as many names have already been given in. Mr. A. Bailey was elected a new member. Next meeting: Breeding experiences of members, and questions by ballot. All fanciers welcome.—J. Woolhouse, Assist. Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting held Old Boar's Head, Manchester, July 5th. A fair number of members put in an appearance. Several applications for our Club patronage were read, it being decided that we give our patronage to Manchester. Also decided to advise secretary to write several societies re giving Lancashire and Lizard classes, as it was considered time we broke fresh ground as far as possible. Also decided, that secretary write Secretary Northern Lizard Club as to the possibilities of an inter-Club competition, same to be held in the North and in Lancashire, Cheshire, or Derbyshire, on alternative seasons. Members keep rolling in, Mr. Hordern sending us a new member in Mr. T. H. Collinge (Rochdale). It seems like old times to see the names of the Rochdale fanciers as members; and I hope ere long to see even more of them under the old flag. The secretary was appointed to attend the meeting of the proposed Lancashire and Cheshire Union, and was given a free hand as to the joining of same. Also suggested that the question of rules, and also fresh standards for both varieties be discussed. Mr. E. Fuller was nominated to judge our section at the Notting Lane show. It was decided to allow the application of the Scottish National to lie over till next meeting. It is hoped that the next meeting, an important one, will be well attended, so that several things can be fairly thrashed out. Due notice of meeting will be given. I trust each and all will have had a good season, and that a good number of new members will join.—John Rukin, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN CREST CLUB.

Meeting held at Newcastle on 12th July, under the presidency of Mr. Robson. Mr. W. Marshall (Blyth) was made a member. Correspondence was read by secretary from secretaries of the Edinburgh, Newcastle, Blaydon, and Gateshead Societies relative to our patronage for their annual shows. Seventeen voted for Gateshead; 2 each for Newcastle, and Blaydon. Our club show will therefore be held at Gateshead. As Edinburgh are not providing the classification required by our club, their application was declined. It seems a pity a show like the Scottish National can only provide four classes for Crests. Messrs. Crawhall and T. Taylor have each promised a gold medal for the novice member who wins most number of points in the two novice classes put on by the Gateshead Society. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded them. Decided, to give three medals at Newcastle and Blaydon shows: Newcastle—1 silver for best old C.B., 1 for best young Crest, 1 for best young C.B; Blaydon—1 silver for best old Crest, 1 for best young Crest, and 1 for best young C.B. Also agreed, that we give the medals, or their equivalent, at our club show, as in past years, viz., 2 gold and 5 silver medals in each of the young bird classes. From a suggestion that originates from Mr. Crawhall, the secretary was advised to write secretaries of all Northern specialist clubs to see if their members would favour a social evening or "smoker," after the show season, when the presentation of the various club's prizes could take place. The idea is to bring fanciers into closer contact with each other. Newcastle was suggested, and Mr. Robson and the secretary were elected to represent the N.C.C. Our chairman then raised a very interesting "talk" on the Crested Canary of to-day, which caused the evening to pass only too quickly.—J. G. Hutchinson, Sec.

CUMNOCK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

General meeting held Co-operative Hall, Auchinleck, July 8. President Mr. Kinnear in the chair, with a fair turn out of members. Business was the consideration of a challenge cup to be competed for yearly, and it was the unanimous finding of the meeting that we get a cup, the secretary and president to get quotations and designs to come before next meeting, September 2, to choose one. We have secured the Co-operative Hall; it is well adapted for a show, with plenty of light and comfortable. We have secured the services of two good judges in the persons of Mr. P. McQuiston, Ayr, for the Scotch, Nor., and Brit. section, and Mr. Wm. Kirkhope, Sanquhar, for Borders. Will any fancier or fanciers within the parishes of Muirkirk, Sorn, Mouchline, Auchinleck, Old, and New Cumnock, Ochiltree, and Tarbolton, wishing to become a member, please communicate with me?—J. Nutt, Sec., 73, Highhouse, Auchinleck.

WINDHILL AND DISTRICT O.S.

Interesting Cricket Match.

Cricket match at Menston, Hare and Hound ground. Fanciers and their wives turned up well. This is without doubt the finest place in the whole dale—the scenery is splendid. After refreshments we adjourned to the field, wickets were pitched, and all were ready for the fray. The captains tossed the coin; Mr. H. Bailey for Windhill and Mr. T. Ogden for the rest, the rest winning the toss and preferred to bat. They batted well, running the score up to 86, when the last wicket fell. Here we adjourned for tea. Forty sat down. The table looked well as we entered. As time was getting on, the umpires called "time." We journeyed to the field. Here the ladies went for a ramble, gathering wild flowers and coming across birds' nests, some with eggs and others with young. Then Windhill were called on to bat. They batted with confidence, and when time was called for drawing at 7.30, the score was standing at 46 for six. This being the 8th season, and not a match has been lost. Who is going to have the first honour? We are open to play any society in the Yorkshire Union. It is expected that Manningham C.B.A. will accept our challenge. Everything went off well except that Mr. F. Hammond retired hurt from batting. We all returned home after a good day's outing, leaving Menston by 9.35 train.—J. Cook, Sec.

Country Rambles

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

Ideal weather favoured the members when some 20 odd went for their annual outing on July 15th. Meeting at headquarters at 2.30, they proceeded by brake to their favourite rendezvous, Wainslodes Hill, reaching there about half-past four. There they were met by some of their Gloucester confrerers, including Mr. J. H. Payne. After justice had been done to an excellent salmon tea, the members faced the cameras of Messrs. Grant and Smith. That formality over, the company broke up into groups, some enjoying a view, others preferring to get out their fishing tackle, while others strolled through the woods in search of bird life, wild seeds, etc. Assembling again at 8.30, the party mounted their brake and the horses' heads were turned towards home, which was reached about 10 o'clock, everybody somewhat tired, but all declaring they had had a most enjoyable trip.—A. S. Treasure.

OLDHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

A ramble took place recently to Broadbottoms, when a party of twelve left Glodwick Station at 9.30 a.m. for the purpose of gaining some little knowledge of wild-bird life. Arriving at our destination at about 10.30 we made arrangements for dinner, and then rambled through Hodge Gardens, where we came across a good number of birds and nests; and although these did not come up to expectations, we enjoyed our ramble round. Before going back for dinner our worthy friend and fancier, Mr. Steeple, took us on the brook in Bottomhall Woods to look for the nest of a Sandpiper, but only one of our number ventured to find it, and he found, to the amusement of the party, that it was a very damp nest, as he fell into the brook and received something free which he would have had to pay for at home. After dinner, to which we did full justice, we decided to take "shanks pony" on to Glossop, where we arrived about six o'clock after a beneficial walk; and I think everyone says we had a good day's outing, and they hope the rambles will continue yearly.—J. Cope, Sec.

BORDER CITY (Carlisle) O.S.

Our third ramble took place on July 16th, when the following were present: Messrs. G. Davidson, T. J. Robson, Jos. Robson, W. Dixon, G. Higgins, R. Macartney, and Wm. Davidson. Leaving Carlisle at about 2 p.m., we proceeded by train to Wetheral. Crossing the high bridge spanning the River Eden an extensive panorama of the Eden Valley is obtained. The beautiful woods of Corby and Wetheral were in full foliage and worth going a long way to see. Passing through the village of Corby we made our way eastward towards Cumwhitton, and from thence to Cumwhitton Moss. Coming to a bye-lane we found a number of nests. Half-a-dozen Greenfinch nests with eggs were found within a space of 40 or 50 yards, also a Blackbird's nest with four newly hatched young ones. Further on we saw alight in front of us a young Cuckoo, which kept searching about, seemingly looking for food until we came to the end of the lane. Several Snipe were seen shortly afterwards, and Yellow and Grey Wagtails. Chaffinches and several other species were also seen. We next made for Allen-wood, as time was now speeding on. Coming to Allengrove we had refreshments, which, seeing the hot day it was, were very acceptable. After looking through the gardens and sampling the fruit we made our way to Heads Nook Station, and took train for Carlisle, which we reached just before nine o'clock.—"One of the Ramblers."

You can do so for 6d. A book specially written for the beginner is Claude St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners." It has many helpful illustrations. ROTHERHAM C.B.S.

Annual F.F. Show held July 15, Mail Coach Inn, Wellgate—a very good room, being well lighted and large. Owing to the poor breeding season experienced by most of the members, the entry was not not as large as in former years, though the quality was good. The attendance was very good. Mr. G. Browning (Rotherham) judged.

HETTON-LE-HOLE C.B.S.

Annual F.F. Show held July 8th, "Crown Inn," when there was the smallest entry that has ever fallen to our lot since the society's commencement in 1895. We had to cancel no less than 17 classes, and the rest were only small. We had some very nice young birds. Mr. G. Vipon won a case of carvers for best young bird in show, R. Allen winning as medal for the second. Mr. A. Brown (Gateshead) judged.

MUSSELBURGH O.S.

Second annual F.F. Show, held July 15, Royal Hotel hall, the entry being down from last year. But what lacked in numbers was made up for in quality. Mr. Smeaton officiated, and gave satisfaction all round. It was unfortunate that there was a band contest and a swimming gala on the same day.

Fifth annual N.F. show, held Blue Boar Hotel, Prittlewell, July 12th, when a fine muster of young birds faced the judge, Mr. A. E. Pattrick, the noted Yorkshire Canary judge, whose decisions gave complete satisfaction. The exhibition certainly does the Society great credit, for the stock was of the highest quality. DUBMIRE WORKMENS' CLUB C.B.S. (Fencehouse).

This newly formed society held their first N. F. show on July 15th in the entertainment hall connected with the club, a grand place for the purpose. The show was a distinct success, and the entry of 73 must be considered very creditable indeed, speaking well for the future prospects of the club, which, if hard work and enthusiasm count for anything, the members declare will soon be one of the largest in the district. Yorks. were the feature of the show, while the other sections were not far behind. Special for best was won by Mr. J. Fenton with a fine Yellow Norwich. The genial sec., Mr. D. Hann, had the arrangements in grand order, ably backed up by the chairman, Mr. J. Fenton; the treas., Mr. J. Henderson, and a hard working committee. The show was opened by James Robinson, Esq., who in an able speech eulogised CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE and its work (referred to elsewhere in this issue—Editor). In conclusion he congratulated the society upon their excellent show, and wished them every success in the future, promising to help them in any manner he could. The chairman, Mr. John Fenton, responded in a few well chosen words. The show was well attended by visitors, and there is every reason to believe the club has a graud future. Mr. A. Widdowfield judged.

OBITUARY.

Mr. J. McDONALD (Queensbury).

It is with deep regret (writes Mr. A. Hartley, secretary of the Queensbury C.B.S.) that I have to inform you of the death of Mr. J. McDonald, who passed away on July 19. During the time he has been a member he has done all he could for the society, and he will be greatly missed by his fellow-fanciers. Also I have to record the death of the beloved wife of Mr. F. Allen, who is one of our staunch members. She had had a long illness. We offer him our sympathy in his great bereavement.

Exhibitors should not overlook Cambridge "mammoth" show on Bank Holiday Monday, where there is a nice classification for cage birds, a separate tent to hold the exhibits, and an excellent array of stewards (all practical fanciers) to look after the wants of the latter. The gala and show, too, afford the opportunity of a very enjoyable day's outing for fanciers who care to personally take down their stock. Entries close this week-end (note show advertisement). Part of the profits is devoted to a local hospital.

An attempt to interest the parishioners of St. John's, Hoxton, in home pets was made on Saturday last, when was held the first Fur and Feather Show open to the parish. The Vicar, the Rev. G. Twentyman, was the moving spirit, and he received valuable help from Messrs. Hunt, True, Stannard, and Bailey. An interesting collection of poultry, pigeons, rabbits, and cage birds was brought together as the result of their labours. Amongst the winners were Mrs. Twentyman, Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Short, Mrs. Keen, Miss Clarke, and Messrs. Hunt, Dennington, Hawkins, Chappel, Bailey, Whybrow, Prescott, and Penney. Mr. C. A. House acted as judge.

Remind Your Judges.

By an accident, I put Leigh Young Bird Show down to be judged as next Saturday (July 29), writes Mr. Chas. Houlton (St. Helens), whereas I ought to have judged it last Saturday (July 22). I had the engagement booked six months ago, and have booked many others since then. I got this one down to the wrong date somehow, and I was away elsewhere yesterday afternoon when the Leigh secretary wired for me after 4 p.m. This was the first reminder of the show since being engaged. I only arrived home late at night. I have written the secretary apologising for the blunder. I have also pointed out that it is the custom to drop the judge a postcard and schedule two or three days before the show. A reminder would have resulted in my finding out the error of date in time. Kindly apologise for me through CAGE BIRDS; and maybe secretaries will take a hint as to the importance of dropping a postcard and schedule to their judges. It is the first time through nearly twenty years of judging that such a mistake has occurred with me, and I feel very sorry about it.

London Federation of C.B.S.

A meeting of the Council will be held at The Feathers Hotel, Great Chapel Street, Westminster, on July 28, at 7.45, when it is hoped that, in view of the long agenda, all delegates will make an effort to be present, writes Mr. James Bray, the hon. sec.

Our Frontispiece.

The Magpie belonging to Mr. A. Martin Kettering) which is depicted in its show cage upon our frontispiece this week, is a well-known prize-winner in the Midlands—at Kettering (three 1sts), Peterborough, Stamford, Burton-on-Trent, etc. The photograph gives one an excellent idea of the type of show cage suited to Magpies and similar large British birds.

Black Redstart Nests.

Canon H. D. Rawnsley writes from Crosthwaite Vicarage to "The Times":—"The Coronation year will be remembered by ornithologists in Cumberland by the fact that for the first time in history, so far as I can learn, the Black Redstart has ventured to nest with us. A nest with four eggs was discovered in our district on May 20, and the identification is certain. I write to ask if your readers can give any other note of the nesting of the Black Redstart in Great Britain."

All is Gay.

Mr. Pat. McClusky (Onchan, Isle of Man) invokes the poetic muse in praise of May. We print two sample verses, though we expect that the average bird-lover has to the best of his ability already "captured gladness" in the manner indicated:—

Come, fancier, greet the country, sweet
With blossom and with flower,
It is the May, and all is gay
Since April sun and shower.

Our fields are bright with birds in fight,
The air is filled with rapture,
Now do arise, ope heart and eyes,
And all the gladness capture.

"Beastly Tame" Bullfinches.

Mr. Sidney Buxton, who is one of the few naturalists in the present House of Commons, told an amusing story some time ago, says the "Daily Sketch," at a meeting of the Society for the Protection of Birds, at which he was to be the principal speaker. The orchards of the Board of Trade had been invaded by a number of Bullfinches and other fruit-eating birds, who had wrought such havoc that remedial measures were found to be imperative. Forthwith the gardener produced an old flint-lock, and sallied forth among the trees to wreak whatever vengeance he could. Shortly afterwards he sought out the governor, and, half apologetically, informed him that the Bullfinches were so "beastly tame" that they actually perched on the end of his gun, so that he hadn't the heart to kill them.—Sent by Master W. Bennett (East Grinstead).

Bird Nesting.

It was the merry month of May, the jovial month of May, when all the birds were mating upon each dewy spray, when the schoolboys went a-nesting, despite the Wild Birds Act, and many a Thrush and Blackbird found their homes despoiled and sacked. Then we said we'd go a-nesting in that merry month of May; and we laid our heads together, and a noble plan did lay. We hunted and we holloaed and we made a jolly row, and, oh! the mud we hurled up at a nest upon a bough. But somehow the darned captain bird would not come off his nest, and a little "clerk" bird sat in front and bade us do our best. He was a nasty little bird, he was, upon my Sam; he sat and sneered and smiled, and didn't seem to care a d——n. But two old birds in plumage gay sat watching our great hunt; they said, "What are you trying to do a-spending all that 'blunt'?" We said, "We'd found a captain bird a-sitting on his nest, and we meant to have him off it before we went to rest." But those two old birds in plumage gay just smiled and looked around; "Go home," they said, "you silly oafs; it's a mares nest that youve found."—"R. A. H." in the "Nottingham Guardian."

All About the Norwich Plainhead.

A Lecture recently delivered before the Sheffield O.S.

By J. A. T. WOODALL (Sheffield).

In giving you a lecture on the above-named popular variety of the Canary Fancy, I feel I have a very difficult task before me; for three reasons, firstly in commencing low enough, so that the veriest novice present can have the opportunity of gaining knowledge; secondly in making it interesting for the old fancier and exhibitor; thirdly in giving you new ideas, etc., in a matter that has been so often dealt with by the most eminent breeders and exhibitors in the country. No doubt week by week you have read the articles that have appeared in the Fancy Press on the different varieties, and have profitted by them. I will now endeavour, by taking you step by step from the bottom rung of the ladder, to entertain you for an hour, and I trust that at the conclusion some gentlemen present will have benefitted by my remarks.

Procuring One's Stock.

In the first instance we must get our stock birds. Of course, I am taking it we have decided to adopt the Norwich Plainhead as our particular Fancy. Don't go to Tom, Dick and Harry and get a bird here and a bird there. Go straight to the fountain-head—to some prominent exhibitor—and place yourself entirely in his hands. Give him an idea as to the price you can afford to pay, and take my advice and pay the best price you can, and instead of getting, say, half-a-dozen pairs, have one or two pairs to commence with, getting the best, as they cost you no more to keep, for unless you have the pedigree you cannot possibly attain any success as an exhibitor.

As it is most important for us to know what constitutes a champion Norwich Plainhead, let us next consider the matter. I have here a suggested model of a Norwich Plainhead Canary, drawn by Mr. H. Norman, artist-in-chief to CAGE BIRDS, and selected as an ideal by four out of six South Country judges under the auspices of the Southern Norwich Plainhead club.

The Importance of Shape.

The most important feature of all is shape, which should be as follows: The head must be round, as wide a skull as it is possible to procure, with short beak. The neck must be short and thick; the chest deep, broad, and full; the back broad and well filled in; the wings and tail short and compact, the former to lie nicely on back, just to meet at tips, but not to cross; the feather soft and silky, with brilliance and compactness. The colour must be deep, bright, rich, pure, and level. The length should not exceed 6½ inches. By totalling all these points you have a bird something the build of the drawing (which I will hand round for your inspection). I hope a few of you have seen some as good in your own rooms this season; perhaps you have, and are keeping them back to give us some great surprises later on.

As we have now summed up what constitutes a Norwich, we will advance one more rung of the ladder and take the three leading points, namely, shape, quality, and colour. I take shape first, as without shape your specimen would be absolutely useless. Shape, as most of us know, or are told, comes from the female side, so that it is most important you should take special care in the selection of your hens. Buff hens are, as a rule, more typical than the yellow, being fuller in neck, deeper in chest, and broader in back; so that it proves it is always advisable to put up the greater number of buff hens.

Quality and Colour Considered.

Quality is another very important feature in the case of the Plainhead Norwich. Always avoid the rough, coarse, and harsh-feathered birds. Don't breed with them if you can possibly avoid it, as you must have quality in your stock, no matter what the cost, if you are to be in any way successful on the show bench. For quality and silky feather the Norwich Plainhead Club allow 15 points. This of itself will prove to you, if you think for one moment, how important is quality.

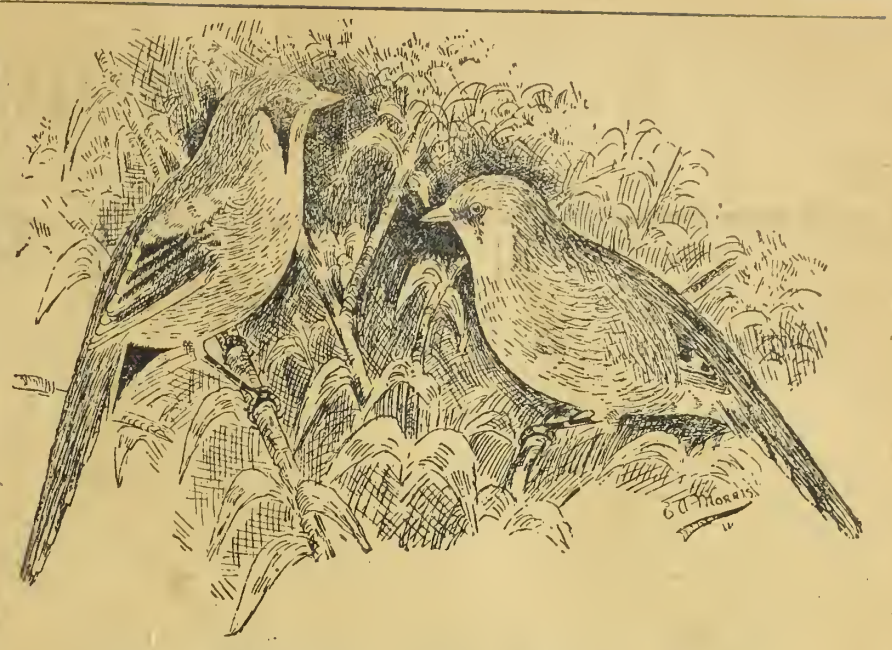
The last of the three leading points, viz., colour, is by no means the least; they all three, in fact, go together to make a champion. If you fail in any one of these three points, you might as well keep your specimens at home, and save the money necessary for entry fees, carriage, etc.

The Norwich, as we all know, is a bird of colour, but to get colour you must breed for it. It is no use putting a yellow cock to a buff hen and trusting to luck as regards the colour. You will always find a heavily variegated bird much deeper and richer in colour than a clear, and as we get colour from the dark variegated blood, let us study for one moment what method will give us the best results. To breed for colour you must get some green blood in your stock. I should suggest that you get a big yellow green cock if possible, although I know yellow green cocks are hard to get hold of. Or you can breed your own stock birds and perhaps have better results, as you will know exactly how they are bred. Get two of the heaviest variegated yellows you can meet with; they must be big birds, as by pairing these two yellows, unless you get extra large birds, you stand a chance of losing size. You must also keep your eye on quality and type. If you manage to breed green or very heavily variegated birds from this mating, you will find that they are all teeming with colour, and paired to typical clear buffs will be of the greatest value as stock birds.

I have introduced the subject of double-yellow breeding above to produce a stock bird, but you can go further than that by this mating. Mr. R. Taylor (of Messrs. Cleminson and Taylor, of Preston) pins his faith on double yellow breeding. I remember him once giving a paper before the Rochdale Ornithological Club on the Norwich Canary, when he proved that their best birds and those they had been the most successful with on the show bench, were all bred from double yellows or double yellow offspring. Of course, it does not follow that the young are going to be all yellows; you will no doubt have one or two buffs. If so, by all means retain them, as these birds paired to good coloured yellows will produce offspring which will be the envy of all fanciers.

The Advantage of Double Buffing.

Now with regard to double-buffing. The great advantage of this is to put size and stamina into your stock. By double-yellowing as I have pointed out, you lose size; but in double-buffing you increase size. But whichever you go in for you must use discretion, as you are treading on very dangerous ground; in fact, it would be advisable for the novice to leave both of these crosses to the experienced fancier, until he has gained sufficient knowledge himself to be able to carry them out successfully.



In selecting your pairs for double-buffing you must exercise great care. Do not let the birds be too long. Get them as chubby as possible, with nice short silky feather. Don't have them too heavily-mealed. If the hen happens to be very tight feathered and heavily mealed, select for her a cock having as little mealing as possible, and soft silky feather. Birds answering this description should make an admirable pair for the purpose. The produce from this crossing must not be paired to buffs, or you will get them too rough and long in feather. But if you have any yellow stock on the small side, by all means pair these buff bred birds to them.

Some Pairing Preparations.

We have studied the best methods for producing absolutely the finest stock possible. Let us now make preparations for the pairing up of our birds. The first important thing is to get your birds into what we all call "breeding condition." To do this they must be absolutely healthy in every detail. If you discover any wheezy or asthmatical birds discard them at once as far as breeding is concerned, as the chances are you will do no good with such birds; and if you did happen to get any young stock from them, they would always have a tendency to be weak, always ailing, and in a good many cases would follow in their parents' footsteps.

I have always found the following the best method for keeping my breeding stock in condition. As soon as they get over the moult (which we will deal with later) I select what I consider are fit for the show bench, both cocks and hens. These I keep in separate 20 inch breeding cages. You will find they have plenty of room in these for exercise, and by being kept in separate cages, there is no chance of their damaging their own or their companions' plumage. The stock I decide to hold over for the next breeding season are all placed in flights, cocks and hens, of course, occupying separate quarters. By these means they will get any amount of exercise, which is one of the greatest necessities if you are to keep your birds.

THE BEARDED REEDLING (OR TIT).

THE BEARDED REEDLING.

By E. A. MORRIS (Ilford).

Although a great lover of all sections of the cage bird fancy, there is one branch that interests me above all others, and that is the keeping and management of most species of our British softbills. Therefore the insectivorous classes at our shows have to me always been a special attraction. It was while I was looking over the softbill classes at the Crystal Palace show some few years ago that I first became acquainted with the Bearded Reedling, or "Bearded Tit," as it is often called. If I remember rightly, this particular bird was exhibited by Mr. Lowne, of Great Yarmouth, and it stood first in its class. From that time I determined to make the Bearded Reedling an addition to my stock, an introduction which I have never regretted. Since then I have seldom been without a pair or more of these fascinating and interesting pets.

Not a Delicate Softbill.

The Bearded Tit is not what I should term a delicate softbill. I have known the species to be kept for quite a considerable time on just the ordinary Lark or Thrush mixture. But I do not advise fanciers to proceed on these lines. Cleanliness and careful feeding are all that are required to keep these birds in perfect health and condition.

In the case of those fanciers who keep a few softbills only, it is not necessary to prepare one's own insectivorous food, as there are several splendid preparations on the market (see CAGE BIRDS advertisement columns) suitable for all kinds of softbills. Some fanciers moisten their softbills' food with water, but I prefer to use grated carrot for the purpose, as by so doing you are supplying the birds with a vegetable matter which I consider is very essential for almost all classes of birds kept in captivity.

Insect life in almost any form is greatly relished by the Bearded Tit. A few gentles or chopped mealworms should be added daily to their soft-food.

When possible the food should be placed outside the cage, as when placed inside they have a habit of raking over their food in a manner similar to that of a fowl, and by so doing naturally waste more than they eat. Being birds that in their native haunts frequent broads and marshy spots, they should have a bath placed at their disposal. This I have always found they appreciate.

It does not need an experienced ornithologist to determine the sex of the bird in question. The hen is very sombre in colouration compared with the cock. The marking of the male bird is as follows: head and neck slaty blue; back and tail a rich buff colour; throat white, with a black beard running from each side of the beak, almost down to the breast; beak orange; base of tail and vent black; legs black; breast and thighs a delicate mauvish brown. The hen is practically a greyish brown all over, with the exception of the throat and breast, which are a dirty white, and she has no beard.

Being a very lively bird, the Bearded Tit naturally requires a fairly roomy cage, or better still, a small aviary. When kept in the latter, it is not an unusual occurrence for the species to nest, and even lay, if they are kept as advised above. Some years ago I had a pair kept in an aviary, from which I had three nests of fertile eggs in one season. But I have never had a hen to sit and rear her young. Unfortunately I was not in a locality where I could find a Hedge Sparrow's or a Wagtail's nest in which I could put the eggs.

As an Exhibition Bird.

As an exhibition bird the Bearded Tit ranks high on the list of small softbills, and it is very rarely you see a really good specimen low down in the awards. But it is very rarely one can identify a genuine Britisher on the show bench. Like the Dartford Warbler, they are very rare in this country, but I believe a few pairs still breed on the Norfolk Broads.

The Bearded Tit is not a bird that suffers to any great extent during the moult, and I have never had much trouble with them at this period; but, of course, much depends upon the conditions under which they have been kept during the early part of the year.

Whether this bird is improved or not by colour-feeding is just a matter of opinion, so I will not venture further on the subject.

Staging plays a prominent part in the matter of success with this bird. I have seen some splendid specimens staged in most unsuitable cages, which always makes their chances of success very remote. A good-sized softbill cage, enamelled cream or light pink inside, with the wire front the same colour, and outside of cage enamelled black, is in my opinion the most suitable show cage for the Bearded Tit.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Rollers Getting Bare.

Miss A. D.—It is not very uncommon for them to begin to look rather bare at this time when the moult is about commencing, where it has not already begun, and the birds get all right after the moult. But it may also occur from debility brought about by breeding with closely related birds, and if your young bird already shows signs of going the same way, it is not unlikely this may be the cause in your case, when treatment is rarely, if ever, very satisfactory for any length of time. To give them the best possible chance treat as follows until the end of the moult. For one week give a staple of plain canary seed only, and a free supply of green food daily. No other food or tit-bits of any kind. In the drinking water during this time give 20 drops of whisky, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and 8 or 10 shreds of saffron every second day. After this add a third part of summer rape to the staple diet and twice a week give a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and sprinkled with soft sugar. On two other days each week give a pinch of maw, and once a week a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts linseed, teazle, and millet. Give a little green food daily, and a mealworm a day whilst moulting would be most beneficial, but otherwise strictly limit the dietary to the above regimen, and stop all other tit-bits. Keep cage strewn with clean gritty sand, and make yourself quite sure there are no red mites secretly harbouring in them. Allow birds to bathe quite freely, and twice a week for a month smear the bare places with sulphur ointment.

Bare Head and Neck.

Bald Pate.—Judging from your last letter, which is much clearer as to origin of the bareness, I have no doubt that it is largely due to the moult, and that it will also disappear to a great extent when the moult is over. The quicker and better the moult as a whole, the more completely will these symptoms of bareness be removed, therefore your chief object must be to get your birds through as good a moult as possible. The bareness may not be completely recovered from in the adult bird, as this, to a certain extent, depends upon her age and general vigour, and I still think there is some debility in the strain, so you must not be surprised if only the young birds completely recover. To give them the best possible chance keep them in an equable and warm temperature during the moult, in a bright and healthy position, and free from draughts. Of course, at present the normal temperature is quite sufficient, but if there should come a cool change then see the birds are kept as near as can be to the present degree of warmth. Give a diet of plain canary only. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape per bird, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of egg-food sprinkled with maw seed. Twice a week for a month, and once a week for another month afterwards, slightly dust the egg-food with flowers of sulphur before adding the maw, and on two other days each week during the same time mix in the egg-food four drops of a mixture of equal parts of compound syrup of hypophosphites and syrup of iodide of iron. Once a week give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts linseed, black rape, millet, and broken groats, and three or four times a week a spray of green food. Stop using the ointment advised in last reply as soon as they show through the skin.

Birds with Worms.

E. S. P.—It is not improbable that any other bird or birds living in the same cage with the one that died may also be troubled with worms. Still, I should not much care about treating any birds for this trouble until some symptoms of it had been demonstrated by the appearance of worms in the droppings. But if you wish to treat them in order to be on the safe side, proceed as follows:—In the first place keep cages, perches, and food and water vessels scrupulously clean—you might scald the vessels or immerse them for an hour in a saturated solution of common salt, two or three times during treatment, and also sponge the sand trays with the solution about as often. Get a chemist to mix one grain of powdered santonine with five grains of powdered arcca nut. Divide this into four equal parts, and each part will be a sufficient dose for those birds the size of a Norwich Canary. Each bird will require four doses, so you will know what quantity to ask the chemist to mix. If you have only three birds, the above-named quantity will be all you need. For the treatment it will be most convenient to keep the birds in groups of three. Remove all food in the evening. Next morning mix one of the portions of powder with a teaspoonful of very slightly moistened sponge cake, add a pinch of maw seed, and mix all well together. Give only this for food until near mid-day. Then put on the usual seed diet. Next day add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the drinking water until mid-day, then change it for fresh pure water. For the next two days after add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid to the water. Then miss one day, and begin the four days course over again in the same order. Repeat the course twice again until the four portions of powder have been used.

Too Short Song (New Year).—I fear you are under the mistaken impression that the better a price you pay for a Yorkshire the better it should sing. If this is your idea you are wrong. The Yorkshire is not in any sense bred to type for singing qualities, and it is quite possible for the best show bird bred to be the poorest performer at singing. If you want to get full value for money spent in song alone, you should have gone in for a properly trained Roller. It is also possible your bird may be a "singing hen," but that you could only learn by making yourself quite sure of its sex. As it appears in good health and condition it does not need any medical treatment. You might try letting it have the company of a good lusty singing cock for a few weeks, when it is about resuming song after moulting.

Started Moulting (In Doubt, Levenshulme).—Yes, the bird has undoubtedly started to moult, and seems to have broken away very favourably, so all you need do is to take ordinary care to protect him from draughts. In addition to its staple diet, give a small tea-spoonful of the egg-food twice a week, on two other days a third of a teaspoonful of maw seed, and on each of the remaining days a spray of green food. When you notice the new head and neck feathers beginning to appear, substitute a pinch of linseed twice a week for the maw seed, and add 20 drops of chemical food to the drinking water for the remainder of the moult. Keep cage strewn with clear gritty sand; see that it is free from red mites, and allow the bird to bathe freely. It will not now be in good song again until the moult is quite finished.

Maw v. Poppy Seed (S. T. W.).—The difference between maw and poppy seed is simply that of two species of the same genus of plants. The maw of commerce is, I believe, the seed of the white opium poppy, and is of a blue-grey colour. The seed of the scarlet poppy of our fields is of a dark brown hue. I have used the latter sparingly at times without any ill effect, but have not used it largely. Still I do not see any grave objection to using it partly, if not wholly as a substitute for the maw seed usually sold. It may be only the prejudice of a conservative habit that induces most of us to give a decided preference to the grey seed, perhaps because it costs us money, whereas the seed of the wild poppy can be got for nothing, and with scarcely a bit of trouble, seeing that it is one of the very easiest seeds to gather and "clean."

Curious Behaviour (R. G. L.).—I do not think there is anything wrong with the hen beyond being, perhaps, just a little fagged with feeding. Most birds behave as you say yours does occasionally at one time or other, and it is always more noticeable just before the moult. It may be simply ennui, or the birds feeling a bit run down with family cares, or the approach of the moult, and sometimes it is due to sheer nervousness, in which case the action occurs only when the disturbing cause is present, which can easily be detected by careful observation, and should then be removed. There is no need to give scalded teazle daily; stop this. Also give 20 drops of whisky, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and half as much chlorate of potash in the drinking water daily for three days. Supply the bath regularly, and give a little green food daily, when the symptoms should quickly pass away.

Injured Hind Claw (Gladwin).—I'm afraid you will not be able to do much for this toe, as my experience is that this kind of injury is rarely, if ever, amenable to treatment. Still you can try. Bathe the foot first for a few minutes in fairly warm water, then gently work a few drops of olive oil about it; wipe off all superfluous oil, and then put on a rubber ring to hold the hind toe back for a time. To make ring cut slightly less than an eighth of an inch off the end of feeding-bottle tubing; and to put it on hold the foot between the thumb and forefinger of left hand with the hind toe held back against the leg and the three fore toes close together. Pass the ring over the fore toes, and upwards on to the leg, until it is nearly to end of the hind toe, and leave it there, when the hind toe will be still within the ring and will be held back by it permanently. Allow this ring to stay on a month, then cut it off, repeat the bathing and oiling of the foot, and give it thin perches as advised to "J. S. Burgess" in last issue for a few weeks.

Canary Moulting (L. F. C.).—(1) If you are already feeding correctly and the bird appears in fair, average health, there is no real necessity to make any great change in the diet, and you must certainly not feed him wholly, nor chiefly, on soft food. Keep him in a bright, healthy place, free from draughts, allow him to bathe freely, and if the moult is very slowly, throw a light cover over the cage, which will help it along. Feed on a staple of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition, give a morsel of bread and milk about the size of a hazel nut sprinkled with maw seed once a week, and on one or two other days each week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge or Madiera cake, with a pinch of maw added to it. Give a spray of chickweed, shepherd's purse, or a plantain stalk daily. Toward the end of the moult you may give a pinch of linseed, and add 20 drops of chemical food to its water twice each week for a month. (2) For details of destroying red mites, see reply to "T. B.," on July 15th.

Toe Sticking Out (A. B., Manchester).—You have overdone the correction of the prior deformity by keeping the bands on too long. At the age of the bird a month would have been amply sufficient to leave them on. You may try the alternate, hot and cold baths, as advised to "J. S. Burgess," in last issue, every second day for a fortnight, rubbing in a drop of olive oil gently afterwards. Also put in one of the small perches advised, in place of one of the thicker ones. With this treatment the toes may come right in the course of a few weeks. But do not expect them to do so all at once.

Hardly any Beaks (Welshman).—In the absence of any particulars of any kind, the only explanation I can suggest of the young Canaries having hardly any beaks at all, as you say, is that one or both of the parents nipped them when the birds were very young in the nest, and that the injury healed without you noticing it. It is a vice some parents are occasionally addicted to, but whether by accident or design, is not clear. If the birds can pick up seed and crack it tolerably well, they will get along fairly well, and probably recover a certain amount of substance of mandible in the course of the first year or so.

Young Birds' Moult (L. M. Nicholls).—You omit to say what breed the birds are, or whether you wish to colour-feed them or not. If you do not wish to colour-feed, as long as the birds keep in apparently good health and vigour there is no real necessity for special treatment. The treatment advised to "L. F. C.," which see, is sufficient for all ordinary cases. If you wish to colour-feed them, you are really too late to do it properly now they have started to moult. You ought to begin before the moult commenced. Still, if you wish to try it, give a staple of plain canary only, a pinch of rape every second day, and twice a week on the alternate day a pinch of a mixture of hemp, millet, teazle, and linseed, and a small spray of green food three times a week. For the colour-feeding, you must give a small teaspoonful of soft food—egg food or crushed sponge cake—with colour added every day right through the moult, until birds are in fine feather again. The soft food may consist of one finely minced hard-boiled egg with double its bulk of bread crumbs or crushed biscuit (a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake may be used instead of this mixture), and in this thoroughly blend two teaspoonfuls of colour, gradually increasing it to four teaspoonfuls in a week, and when the head and neck is moulting again, reduce the proportion of colour by one-half to finish off with.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

Death of Zebra Finch.

M. E. Sharp.—These birds are very interfering with other birds anywhere near their nest, especially the male, though he never does any harm accordiug to my experience, and he may have caught an unlucky blow on the top of the head in consequence. Again, excitement runs high at this period, often ending in the rupture of a small blood vessel on the brain and consequent sudden death, the cause of which only a post-mortem would reveal—such cases are not uncommon, and has very probably been the case with your bird. I am of the opinion the hen will successfully rear the young—by all means try her with small, smooth caterpillars, ants' eggs, live or preserved, the former for preference, and let her have access to as much lettuce and flowering grass as she will eat. The young birds will leave the nest very shortly. The site of the nest is an unusual one. All the items you mention can be put where the bird can readily see them, and then leave her severely alone and the young should be successfully reared —though if the brood be a large one a couple of the smallest and weakest may not be reared. In my aviaries, under similar circumstances, with similar species, I have bred broods of three fully reared, and I think similar luck will be yours.

No Breeding Results.

"Aviary."—It is difficult to account for such cases; your dietary is ample, and it would appear that they have natural cover, as well as unlimited receptacles for nesting purposes. There are, however, two points on which you are silent, viz.: How long the birds have been in the aviary; is the aviary infested with mice? The latter often results in the upsetting of breeding results, by the disturbance they cause, quite apart from occasionally killing an adult bird and fouling the food. As regards the former, foreign species take a little time to settle down, and in fresh quarters will often build several nests, before a clutch of eggs is finally laid. Black-headed Nuns very seldom breed in captivity, why, it is hard to say, but it is so. All the other species should breed with you before the moult sets in. Redpolls are fascinating birds, but very mischievous, while their proclivities for interfering with other birds' nests, etc., almost equals that of mice. Even experienced aviarists have their bad seasons, when nothing goes to nest, or the few nests that are made yield no result. Aviculture calls for patience, and to such (by careful observation) the failure of one season should mean triumph in another. However, it often happens that the first year of an aviary is not a successful one, especially when trees, etc., have been only newly planted—the general newness and artificialness of things possibly affects the birds, a season's growth alters all this, and the birds get accustomed to their environment, and give good results afterwards.

Budgerigars (Amateur).—Providing you have at least eight nesting husks hung up for the birds as far apart as possible, and the aviary is not infested with mice, it is merely a case of allowing the birds to settle down, which they will ultimately do, and once they have started they continue to breed freely enough. Budgies, though free breeders in captivity, sometimes take a season to settle down; there is plenty of time for them this season yet, right up to the cold season. Sow the portion under wire roof with grass, oats, wheat, etc., also supply cuttlebone. Your diet is very satisfactory, and you have simply to wait with what patience you can for them to settle down. When in breeding condition the cere of the male is bright blue, and that of the female ruddy brown.

Cockatoo in Moult (B. Magraith).—You must give me a little more information before I can give you material help. How long have you had it? How has it been fed and treated? Observe it closely, and note if it is pulling out, or biting off its feathers. In the meantime, give a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia—one teaspoonful in the daily supply (about one ounce) of drinking water—every fourth day, and on the intermediate days put Parrish's Chemical Food in the drinking water. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. On receipt of the above details I shall be pleased to try and help you further.

Sexing Bengalese and Silverbills (M. E. S.).—There is practically no difference in plumage as to the Bengalese, but the Silverbill is not of quite so rich a hue, that is, when comparing adult birds. Sexing these birds is by no means easy, but the following distinctions apply to both species: In the female the head is narrower and the beak shorter and stouter than that of the male. The Bengalese have been produced by hybridisation, and though they usually readily nest and produce eggs, very many of the latter are unfertile or young chicks dead in shell. Observe your birds carefully, and if there is any slight difference in the shape of the head or beak, leave them to take their own course and you will ultimately get some young. The cock Silverbill may usually be told also by the apparent prodigious efforts he makes while singing.

Grey Singing Finches (C. K. E.).—Treat much the same as a Canary, or supply a mixture of four parts each Canary and white millet, with one part each of rape and teazle, and pinch of maw seed—well mix and keep a regular supply in cage or aviary—also supply spray millet, greenfood, cuttlebone, and grit, with water for drinking and bathing. These birds should have a roomy cage, and it will tend greatly to their welfare if a small turf (similar to those supplied to Larks) be given occasionally, especially if the grass is in flower or seeding; if it is, water well daily and then return to cage after the water has drained away. It will keep fresh several days. Or several of them may be so treated and supplied to the birds on alternate days.

Parrot with sore foot (Pretty Polly).—A better mixture for the bird would be two parts Canary and white millet, and one part each hemp, oats, dari, maize, and sunflower seeds, well mix and keep a supply in the cage; also supply ripe fruit, nuts, and plain biscuit. Well cleanse the sore foot with warm water, and also bathe the thigh with the same. Anoint the foot with a little healing ointment and paint the swollen part of leg with whisky. The foot trouble may be either a splinter in its foot, or some septicaemic trouble. If there is not an improvement soon, I should advise having it examined by your local vet. Keep its bowels moving freely (not watery-loose) by occasional doses of Dinneford's magnesia—one teaspoonful in the daily supply (about one ounce) of drinking water.

Poppy heads and birds (E. M. B.).—For such birds as will take it, or the blight from it, I do not think the poppy does any harm in the aviary; at least, I have it growing in my own, and three young White-eyes (Zosterops) have been reared in the aviary this season. We supply maw seed to our birds, and so long as they do not get the poppy seed in too great a quantity it will do no harm. At least, I have never had any loss I could attribute to it. However, it should not be given in too great quantity, though if your aviary is a spacious one, giving ample room for exercise, there is but little danger in letting them have it liberally.

What are They? (W. H.).—The first-named bird is undoubtedly an Orange Bishop (Weaver). At the same time your description comes very near to the Napoleon Weaver, but the latter bird is rich yellow and black, while the former is fiery orange and black. The description of the second species is rather vague, but I am of the opinion that they are Red-billed Weavers the male of which will become much brighter as to the hue of its body plumage and its face will be adorned by a black mask. The present is about the period that African Weavers don nuptial (breeding) plumage in this country.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Red Mites.

S. P. Millar.—Unfortunately you have unwittingly committed a serious error in allowing the red-mites to accumulate in "very large numbers." The only possible method of coping with these pests (to keep them down to a minimum, that is) is to deal with them immediately any are observed about the breeding cages. When very numerous they spread from the cages to the walls and then, of course, the latter require cleansing, too. I don't know much about garden insecticides, but believe some of them poisonous, so not suitable for use in cages. Some of the best disinfectants, too, stain wood, and you might not care for this. I presume you cannot empty the cages, so your best plan will be to paint every crack and crevice (woodwork and wirework) with a mixture (equal parts) of petrol and turpentine. Let it run freely into the joints, especially places which show signs of harbouring colonies of the pests, both outside and inside the cages. The walls, etc., should be washed with a solution of carbolic (try Calvert's strongest, made according to the directions accompanying it. There will be no red-mites left then, unless you let any escape you. Let the birds bathe in water to each pint of which has been added one dram of sulphuretted potash. Use the potash twice or thrice, at short intervals. Don't let the mites get the upper hand again. Keep some of the petrol and turps by you and use it on the cage joints, etc., occasionally, as may be necessary. I find the best method of keeping mites out of the nest-pan is to dust thickly under the lining with Cook's co-fectant powder (obtainable cheaply of any chemist). After the young birds are 7 or 8 days old some can be dusted on top of the lining, too.

A Blackbird (George Young).—Gently bathe the parts daily over a short period with warm water, which has been turned the colour of port wine by the addition of a little Condy's fluid.

A Starling (Redlichtic).—These birds are known to be peculiarly liable to be troubled by worms infecting the throat, etc. Try the effect of stirring some ordinary table salt into the drinking water for a time—say, a saltspoonful into two ounces.

A Quintette (P.T.H.).—(1) The birds you name should agree quite well together, and be thoroughly suited to the aviary you describe. (2) It will not be necessary to disturb the birds at all (i.e., cage them for a time) at the commencement of the breeding season. Providing you put in true pairs, they will breed in due course (assuming, of course, that they choose so to do). (3) The seed mixture would be better if you reduced the summer rape to two parts. Give also (in a separate dish) some good sound hemp and sunflower seeds frequently (especially during the colder weather). (4) They will winter all right with the extra shelter mentioned. (5) Use the strong-smelling pitch-pine sawdust to fill the spaces between the aviary casing.

A Weakly Magpie (Sparrow).—Your method of feeding is at fault. The food you mention is very good for the price charged, but does not contain sufficient nourishment to keep such a bird as a Magpie in vigorous health and good condition. As a matter of fact, this bird needs flesh food regularly, the best of all being newly-killed mice and Sparrows, while mutton, beef, rabbit flesh, fowl's "innards," liver, etc (cooked and raw), can be utilised as a change. Black beetles (cock-roaches) are also much esteemed. To give ripe fruit is quite correct; while potatoes, greens, and the like left over from table, are greatly enjoyed if given soaked with gravy. Magpies don't need all these things daily, of course, but from time to time, as a change. Your bird will never be robust unless you amend its dietary. Bread and milk is all right for children and old folk (I like it myself), and it has its uses (but they are limited) amongst birds. As a stock food for the Magpie, take a quantity of a first-class dog food (such as "Melox," or Spratts), thoroughly soften it with hot water, then add some of the packet food you mention—sufficient to make the whole crumbly moist. Make it fresh daily. This is good and economical.

Room for Birds (J.M.).—It is largely a matter of personal taste. If you just want a few British birds to look at, admire, and study, then you could fit up the room mentioned, and turn them loose therein. Under such conditions, however, I never think British birds are really seen at their best unless one can contrive some means of observing them from the outside—or, at least, in such a way as obviates one's presence in the room "flustering" the birds. You ask my opinion, and I give it in favour of a series of large flight cages (with a few small single cages) around the walls. Then the birds are more under control, and one is able to pick and choose amongst a greater number of species for suitable inmates of the flights, etc. This latter method is somewhat the more expensive of the two, of course, unless one has the time to construct one's own flights, etc. You could start with any of the seed-eaters.

A Cuckoo (Laing).—A good food can be made by thoroughly softening (soaking) with hot water a tablespoonful of crushed Melox (or other good brand of dog food), and then adding about the same quantity of a high-class insectile mixture, dry. Several good foods are advertised in our columns at from 1s. 6d. a pound upwards. It is against the rules to recommend any particular one. For variety give now and again chopped hard-boiled egg, cut up greenfood (lettuce, watercress, etc.), shredded lean meat (beef, mutton, or fowl, or rabbit flesh), black beetles (cock-roaches), meal worms, well-scoured gentles, and anything living, in fact, which seems suitable (caterpillars, grubs, flies, etc.). In captivity Cuckoos are really very accommodating in the matter of food, and will gulp down anything from a gooseberry to a wire-nail, but as pets they are absolutely the last birds I should recommend anyone to keep. I have "had some," as the poet says, and never than once. They get bedraggled and dirty-looking, no matter how clean their cage, while it is very, very difficult to keep the plumage unbroken (and new feathers for some reason or other rarely attain to perfect growth); further, the nature of their excrement makes them offensive unless their cage is constantly cleaned out, and lastly—and worst of all—they are most difficult to keep alive and healthy over a lengthy period. If your bird is alive at this time next year you will have achieved a notable feat.

Young Bullies Hoped For (Bull).—I should be glad to know how your pair of Bullfinches get along. It is not at all unusual for a hen Bullie to incubate eggs when in a cage. Most of them sit very tight for at least a week; they seem apt to "chuck it" after this period, however, at any moment. If they hatch young, the danger is that one or other of the parents will pitch them out of the nest. I have tried so many Bullie hens and found them wanting in what I may term the finer feelings of motherhood, that I have become a pessimist concerning them. I had a high opinion of one hen this season, and let her have some fertile eggs. She incubated them all right, but apparently considered the young no ornaments to the nest; she soon deposited them outside on the floor. Your method of feeding is excellent, but you should arrange regular and liberal supplies of ripe seeding shepherd's purse (chickweed, and groundsel tops, too, if at all possible).

A Plant (Bird Toon).—The plant you send is actually dandelion. There can be no doubt about this. Daudelion is readily identified by reason of the leaves and flowers all coming direct from the root—there is no stem bearing both leaves and flowers. It is a common mistake to consider that dandelion flowers only in the spring. It is in the spring, however, that this plant is of most use to fanciers.

Seed Mixture for Aviary (Acacia). — The only precaution really needful is to protect them from draughts, which are disastrous to moulting birds. The young Canaries can be allowed a somewhat more generous diet—such as coarse oatmeal, hemp seed and cracked sunflower seed. Let them have a little soft-food frequently—a sweet Plasmon biscuit crushed and moistened with new milk is excellent; quite as good as egg-food for this purpose, and much more easily prepared The stock mixture for the aviary should consist of best canary three parts, teazle two parts, summer rape one part, and linseed half-part (by measure). The other seeds should be supplied in a separate dish. Glad to hear of your high opinion of CAGE BIRDS.

A Trio (Eager).—I have never used this plant. All the best wild-seed plants for birds were depicted on the coloured plate which accompanied the last Birthday Number of Cage Birds, and you can easily recognise them by consulting it. (2) A Mealy Redpoll should not be colour-fed. Purity of the silvery ground colour of its plumage is a strong exhibition point of this bird. (3) You can only guess at the sex of young Hawfinches (cock and hen being alike in plumage) by choosing the richest coloured—those carrying the strongest reddish-yellow tone. In adults, the hen is a dull greyish-brown colour, whereas a good cock bird has a coat of rich tones of reddish-brown, to say nothing of his jet black bib and metallic black wing feathers. CAGE BIRDS has published a coloured plate depicting cock and hen Hawfinches; no doubt you could purchase a copy. As regards the feeding, note another reply this week.

A Ring Dove-Antwerp Pigeon Hybrid (A. Munton).—I am sorry if my reply should disappoint you, but I am afraid your hybrid is of no value whatever from the cage-bird exhibitor's point of view. Doves and pigeons are not catered for at cage-bird shows. The Antwerp pigeon is neither a cage-bird nor a British bird (as the exhibitor construes the latter term); and the ordinary Ring Dove (i.e., the Barbary Dove) is not a British bird either. May-be, however, by "Ring Dove" you intend to indicate the Wood Pigeon. Your hybrids, of course, may be of some value to collectors of such "freaks."

Seeds, etc., for Hawfinch (H.M.T.).—The principal food is sound, plump, white sunflower seed, and a mealworm or two every day or so. The bird also appreciates hemp, linseed, canary, oats, and sometimes a little buckwheat, summer rape, small Indian corn, etc., beechmast, suitable nuts (walnuts, etc.), plum and cherry stones, hawthorn, privet, etc., berries, and the like. They relish a little young lettuce, watercress, chickweed, shepherd's purse, also ripe apple, pear, etc., occasionally. They love tender green garden peas, given in the pod. They are fond of a bath.

Wild Plants (Daffodil).—Your specimens were in a very dried up (withered) condition when they reached me, owing doubtless to the exceptionally hot weather, making identification a matter almost of impossibility. No. 1 seemed to be mouse-ear chickweed, and No. 3 one of the stitchworts, but No. 2 I could not identify. When full of ripe seeds, No. 1 is excellent for birds.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Lena Rochford.—Fatty degeneration of the liver as existing disease; enteritis as a sequel to disorganisation of the liver cells. Give your remaining birds an occasional dose of sulphate of soda in their drinking water.

Quills.—Acute enteritis, due to the introduction to the digestive system of irritant foreign bodies. The true stomach (proventriculus) contained pieces of stone, grit, and amongst other things a piece of bone. The irritation produced by these foreign substances was responsible for death.

I. D. L.—Peritonitis was the cause of death. The whole body cavity a quantity of bad smelling septic fluid. The trouble evidently arose in the oviduct, which was likewise intensely inflamed.

R. G. Leigh.—Death arose from heat apoplexy or congestion of the lungs due to the heat. In the event of such occurring in any of your other birds place them in as cool a position as possible, and give a heart stimulant, such as aromatic spirits of ammonia in 10 drop doses in the drinking water, sweetening the mixture with a little simple syrup, or syrup of prunes. Some birds are more predisposed than others, particularly those of a nervous temperament, or, again, those in which the heart is not overstrong. The heat acts by oppressing the heart's action, lessening the force of the circulation, and producing a venous stagnation in the lungs.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

A Ramble (J. A. T. Woodall).—We shall hope to publish this next week.

A Club Notice (Lane and Jowett).—Your card arrived after CAGE BIRDS had gone to press, or we would certainly have obliged you by publishing it. Sorry; please post earlier, as per our notification.

A Letter (T. H. Cullen).—We have to thank you for an interesting letter, to which we will reply direct. Sorry to hear of your recent trouble. Hope the "silver lining" is near.

An Aviary (W. Hulett).— Thanks for the photograph, which we will publish in the supplement to one of our special double numbers. May your good fortune with your birds long continue.

A White Blackbird (W. J. North).—It sounds like a contradiction in terms, of course, but is not so in reality. Because a bird is born white, it does not become a new species—it is still a Blackbird. Hence the term White Blackbird is absolutely correct. Many freaks of this kind have been known; in fact, never a show season passes without White Blackbirds being exhibited.

Annual show held July 22nd, Band-room. There was a good entry, and the show was well patronised by visitors. The special prize for best bird went to a typical clear yellow Yorkshire, owned by Mr. W. T. Bowe, the same fancier also winning special for most points. Mr. J. T. Greenwood (Hebden Bridge) placed the cards, and his awards gave every satisfaction. CL. ETC. ,YEL. ATTERCLIFFE AND DIST. C.B.S.

Annual N.F. show held July 15th, Attercliffe Vestry Hall. The entry was a fair one, taking into consideration the bad season some of our members have had. But it was surprising what a very poor attendance there was to see the birds, which were of excellent quality. Messrs. Smith, Exton, and Blunt are to be congratulated on the teams which they put down. May they have a good moult is my wish. Mr. W. Bagnall judged.

Song Thrush's Nest in a Geranium.

Sir,—When on my holidays in North Berks last week, I was shown a Song Thrush's nest built in the top of a large ivy leaf geranium in flower, and containing four young birds nearly fit to leave their warm nest. The parents gained access to the plant (to build the nest) through the fanlight of the greenhouse. I think it a very unnatural place for a Song Thrush to build in.

A Hen Bullfinch Rears Three Young Canaries.

Sir,—I have a Bullie hen (paired to a Greenfinch cock) which has sat the eggs and reared three young Canaries in a cage. They are eleven days old to-day (Sunday, July 23). She makes an ideal mother. I feed her just the same as my Canaries. I have never reared a Bullie Hybrid, for either the Canaries throw them out or the eggs get broken or are addled. But I shall let this hen Bullie sit on her own eggs next year. I shall be pleased to show anyone them at 96, Bartholomew Street, Leicester. F. S. Jeffery.

Four Birds Out of Three Eggs.

Sir,—Being a reader of your valuable paper, Cage Birds, here is a little incident I think worthy of note. I am only a novice at bird-breeding, and had hatched last Tuesday (July 18) four birds out of three eggs! One of these is very small, but it seems healthy. The others seem nice birds. I should be pleased to hear if anyone has had such a thing happen before. Being a beginner, I do not know much about it, and feel rather anxious. I have spoken to several fanciers, and they reply: "You can't count." But that is not so; I can count up to six, anyway! I wish Cage Birds every success.

C. Heath.

[It is not by any means impossible for two birds to hatch out of one egg. On the contrary, instances of "twins" have been frequently recorded in our columns—one or two this season and several last season.—Editor.]

Goldfinches Nesting in a Cage.

Sir,—The result of the second nest was that the round was a complete failure. The first eggs being clear, I paired her up with the other cock, to which, however, she did not take kindly, for fights were constantly taking place, although I saw them pair several times. The first egg was laid in the nest, the second one on the cage bottom, from which position I carefully rescued it, and placed it in the nest after nicely rounding it up, as I thought. But Mrs. Goldie saw with other eyes, as she soon drilled a hole in one large enough to extract half the contents before I had time to investigate again. After a trip to two dealers' shops two dummies were got, which she also tried her strength on, but, of course, without effect. The third morning I thought I would be astir early, but I was doomed to fate, as the third and (which it proved to be) the last egg was laid and punctured before I had time to save it. Now, however, she is going one better—she has built a grand nest, and from the appearance of her each evening I can count five eggs. She is sitting, so far, as nicely as she did on the first nest. If she sits out her time I shall expect some baby Goldies, as I have Mules from cock No. 2—a Siberian which I have had for five years come November, and this was the first time I tried him with a Canary hen. I have a nest of five eggs all full now hatching from him. I wish your paper, Cage Birds, continued success; also other readers in their efforts.

An Improved Front for Roller Contest Cages.

Sir,—Messrs. Read and Oldroyd seem desirous of knowing why "Schoolmaster" hides his identity. Not for shame, as anyone who knows me knows perfectly well that I always act on the principle that I have a character to lose. With reference to my recent article on the Roller Canary, it happened that in the course of a correspondence I had with the Editor of Cage Birds, he intimated that he would be pleased to publish anything suitable that I cared to contribute. Although as a bird fancier I am now about to "come of age," I have never had, nor have I now, any wish to pose as an authority on this new (to us) variety of Canary. I looked at the matter from another point of view, i.e., a desire to see interest infused into the Roller Canary, also to help the novices. Further, the title of "Schoolmaster" was chosen by the Editor himself, as the one I used was as plain as I am myself—that of "Joe Goss." My remarks on Mr. Pattison's cage front were made in a letter dealing with a question raised upon my article, but were separated by the Editor—hence the nom-de-plume. I cannot see eye to eye with you, Mr. Read, when you write that I laud Mr. Pattison as a "genius." To approve of the principle of an idea is not necessary to suggest that it is even a long-felt want, and much less that its promulgator is possessed of more than ordinary intellect. From what I could see of the picture published I opined that my suggestion that the covers should fit flush, etc., was a little improvement. The objection up to the present seems to be that the birds would still be able to waste their seed even if Mr. Pattison's idea was adopted. My birds are steadied on my table, at meal times, and I find this rather beneficial, as the birds are constantly seeing the movements made by those seated round the table. Yet I have a decided objection to my food being dusted with thrown-out seed. I had heard the idea was being favourably viewed in some localities, and now we find that the Provincial R.C.C., and Midland and Leeds, are in favour, and that Wakefield have rejected it. But I am cognizant of the fact that all the members of the above clubs are not also B.R.C. members; also that the idea has now been referred to committee of our own club. But time alone will tell whether it meets with general approval. It is very kind of you, Mr. Read, to trouble about the state of my mind, but I can assure you it is perfectly tranquil (in fact, rather somnolent at the moment, for I am a Benedict, and often in the midnight hours can be found pacing the bedroom floor, etc.!). I do not think, Mr. Oldroyd, that I spoke strongly—I simply and bluntly stated the true facts of the case. In consequence of our widely-spread membership, you know it is practically impossible to get a majority at a meeting. I do not desire to carry this correspondence any further, as it is bound to raise other questions, and probably end in a controversy. I may say that I have been a reader of Cage Birds since the first issue, and have found it truly a friend, especially in the sale season, as it has always found for me, up to the present, a ready exit for any surplus stock, and I predict that Cage Birds will not be entirely deserted in the coming season by Roller fanciers. And, in parting, I desire to say that I believe that every man has a right to his own opinion; and honour be to him who will endeavour to uphold it.

The Linnet when Moulting.

Sir,—I am a regular and appreciative reader of Cage Birds, and should be glad to know of a quick and safe method of treating a Brown Linnet in the moult. If any experienced fancier amongst your readers can tell me of a good system I shall be pleased to adopt it.

Middlesbro'.

Yorkshire County B.B. and M.C.

Sir,—Will all members kindly note that there is a special meeting at Market Tavern Hotel, Bradford, on Saturday, August 12, time seven o'clock prompt? I earnestly appeal to all who can possibly attend to make a special effort to come. I see no reason why this club should not be one of the best specialist clubs in Yorkshire. It is indeed pleasing to say that our membership is increasing, and we are anticipating that this year will prove a gigantic success. Now, members, show your interest and come and expound your views on August 12, for the business we have on hand is on your behalf. Help us by your presence.

Three Clear Redpoll Mules in One Nest!

Sir,—I paid a visit to the bird-room of one of our member's (Mr. Fred Sokell) on July 16th, and he let me see five of the Redpoll-Canary Mules which he has bred. They are three weeks old, all out of one nest, and there are three clear birds and two slightly marked (one on the side of the head and the other with two dark flights in the right wing). Will you be so kind as to ask Cage Birds' readers what they think about his luck? Mr. Sokell gives all bird lovers and fanciers an invitation to see them.

A Short Sitting.

Hatched after Eight Hours and Reared.

Sir,—I have pleasure in relating a very interesting circumstance in connection with my breeding this season. In addition to Crests (my particular fancy), I have a few Yorkshires and Muling pairs. On Thursday, the 13th inst., I expected a clear Border Fancy hen to hatch five chicks (Mules), the father of which is a fine 1909 British Goldfinch. But on the morning the hen, to my surprise, left the eggs, and when I discovered this they were nearly cold. Of course, I was in a dilemma what to do with the eggs, but immediately it occurred to me to try them under a Crestbred hen (good feeder), which I had set the previous evening. I therefore transferred the eggs to her, and placed her own eggs under another hen (due to hatch about the 26th or 27th inst.). It is very interesting to report that the C.B. hen actually hatched out during the day (Thursday) referred to above four Mules, the fifth being dead in the shell. She is rearing the four splendidly up to date, and I trust will finish her duties satisfactorily to the end. This may not be an isolated case, but to my mind is worth relating as the C.B. hen practically only sat for about eight hours before the chicks hatched. In addition to the Mules mentioned above, I have already on the sticks and in the nests six South American Siskin-Canary Mules and six Goldfinch-Canary Mules from Yellow Norwich hens, consequently have had a satisfactory season, also with Crests and Yorkshires, thanks to the assistance of Cage Birds, from which I have received many useful hints.

J. Darlington.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects. Harmless to everything.

Teaching Magpies to Talk.

Sir,—I shall be glad if any of your readers will kindly give me, through your columns, a little advice on feeding and managing Magpies. If they will talk, how am I to go on to teach them? I have two cocks and a hen.

Can a Norwich Hen be Too High in Colour?

Sir,—It will be remembered by many readers that some time ago we asked the question, Can a Norwich hen be too high in colour to be eligible to compete in a hen class? This occurred owing to our having had two Buffs disqualified by Mr. Roe at the late Paignton Show, but we did not state that we had promised £1 to the funds of the Torbay O.S. if we could not prove these two birds to be hens. We are pleased to say, however, that they are proven hens, as they have been seen both sitting and with young by five members of the committee of the Torbay O.S., viz., Mr. H. Daw, vice-chairman; Mr. Webber, Mr. J. Bastard, Mr. P. W. Mugford, and Mr. W. Hodge. We cannot but feel sorry for Mr. Roe, but it is hard to understand how Messrs. Pope, Redwood, and Veale could have blundered so badly in being positive they were cocks. Mr. Allsopp's letter on the colour question was most acceptable.

"Young 'Un" Sings to a Hull Crowd.

The Escapade of a Contest Linnet.

Sir,—It is pleasing to know that the great strike here in Hull is now settled, thanks to Mr. Askwith, of the Board of Trade. I was walking in the Hessle Road district a few days ago, and seeing a small crowd passing along, naturally I thought the strike had broken out again. I enquired of a little boy what was the matter. He answered, "It's a prize Linnet that's got away, and people here are after it." Being interested, I joined the party. The bird flew into a large tree, and sang us a most splendid song. Here the owner came up and shook the branches. The bird flew away, and was given up for lost. The owner, Mr. Wakling, very much regretted his loss. "I would sooner have lost £10 than my little Linnet," said he. I asked him why he thought so much about it. He answered, "Because it is the best I ever had. He would sing for me anywhere and at any time. I had him at nine singing contests, and he won four 1sts, two 2nds, two 3rds, and a 6th prize. He was known as 'Young 'Un,' and was taught under Mr F. Allen's Linnet." I called upon Mr. Wakling at his address the same evening. To my surprise, there was the Linnet perched on a small tree in the back garden. The merry little fellow was singing beautifully. Mr. Wakling advanced to the bird step by step, cage in hand, and the bird never moved. He allowed himself to be picked up and put back into his cage. Thus, after seven hours of liberty this wonderful little bird came back to its owner and its cage.

Interesting Observations at Everberg Aviaries.

Sir,—I think the following notes will be of some interest to your many readers, fellow fanciers, and bird lovers. A few weeks ago Monsieur Pauwels secured to our mutual desires an additional collection of 43 European birds, amongst which were one pair Blue-headed Wagtails and their five young, one pair ditto with their foster babe, a Cuckoo, fully the size of a Pigeon, one pair Blue-throated Warblers and their five young, one pair Redstarts and four young, and four young Black Redstarts. At the particular request of the seller I placed all these together in a large aviary cage, measuring 5ft. x 3ft. x 4ft., the reason for which he explained was that should the parents of either lot fail to feed their young the Wagtails would do the necessary duties. I did not say much, but I certainly thought the more. However, all together they were put. The next day I sat at my office table (which faces this particular birdroom), and before writing long I observed the gaping mouth of the Cuckoo. Then Mr. Wagtail prances across the cage bottom from the food dish to the Cuckoo and deposits what seems so utterly absurd, just a tiny ant's egg, into its huge mouth. This appeared lost (as it undoubtedly was), so off goes Mr. Blue-head again—this time accompanied and assisted by Mrs. Wagtail. But I notice that after a few journeys with a single egg, they collect quite a quantity into their little bills and, joyfully wagging their tails, strut again to their hungry babe, and, putting the whole lot into the Cuckoo's bill, look as though to say, "There, you greedy bounder, is that enough?" Cuckoo temporarily satisfied, the Wagtails' duties are far from over (and here let me say the four Wagtails enter into the arena), for, standing within a few inches a young Black Redstart calls, and that little mouth is filled. One of their own young then makes vigorous attempts to attract attention, is noticed, and its wants filled. Still they are not finished, for a young Blue-throat calls, and is satisfied. And so these industrious little feathered pets keep up the constant and continuous task. Scarcely have the Wagtails one moment to call their own. I wonder if they think their family is a never-ending one? These remarks are no fairy tale, because I take these notes whilst calmly sitting and smoking a cigarette, only a few feet from the open office door, outside of which stands the large cage these birds occupy. It was certainly a sight I would have accepted "with a grain of salt," or "quiet removal of the hat," had anyone previously related such an apparent fairy tale to me; and yet with my daily care of over 500 (five hundred) British, foreign, and European birds, from Wrens and Warblers to Paradise birds, I am becoming accustomed to each day bringing its surprises and new discoveries, so far as birds are concerned—quaint charms one could not possibly glean from them in their natural haunts. Here is another interesting episode:—On April 18th I had brought to me a nest of Wrens, which I hand-reared, and charming mites they have become. On Saturday, July 2nd, another nest of seven was brought by one of the village boys—reluctantly I accepted them, because I realised hand-rearing with my huge bird family, its daily cries and anxiety, meant so much extra work, and yet if I refused them the little dears would die a miserable death. However, I accepted my new task with the usual interest, but on the Tuesday following one of the former nest escaped from its cage, and, flying loose around the room, was captured by one of my assistants during my temporary absence, and penned in the small cage containing the new nest. Imagine my surprise when going to again remove the escaped one to its proper cage to find it feeding the others. I allowed it to remain; since then it has successfully reared, without any help whatever, five out of the seven, and these not so very much younger than itself. What strikes me as most extraordinary is the fact that an April-hatched bird should foster and rear a brood of seven in July. Is it cruel to keep birds in cages? I would personally like to have some of the fanatics who preach such a doctrine along with me for a few days to watch the cruelty (?) and how the birds enjoy it. Without boasting, I believe I can claim to have kept, and cared for, more living birds in captivity (what a horrid monster I shall appear in the eyes of the aforementioned fanatics!) than any one living to-day, and my experience teaches me birds have not the sense of environment attributed to them. This is evidenced by the rapidity with which they settle down to their new surroundings, and the average length of their lives under such conditions. If they possessed the wonderful sagacity of thinking of, and longing for, the beautiful woods, the rippling streams, or the verdant pastures, they would quickly pine and die, but instead of that, with careful management, daily attention to all their little wants, and a little "petting" (I do not mean handling, but gaining their confidence), they become tame and confiding, and they burst into song, or utter their own peculiar call notes. All these are sure signs of their happiness and contentment. O. Millsum.

Non Colour-fed Classes.

Is it a Mistaken Idea?

Sir,—I should like to speak on Mr. Claude St. John's letter of July 22. We are all aware that he is a very experienced gentleman, but one remark struck me, viz., "If the trouble of colour-feeding is a really valid obstacle, why do these fanciers breed at all?" There are many beginners in the Fancy (or in other words, amateurs), and these are not in the hobby very long before being made aware that it is a kind of struggle to get to the "top hole," or to possess some "class." The first year, say, he has succeeded in getting twenty or thirty young, and apparently all doing well. He proudly folds his arms, and says, "My word, this is extra; I have done well, and a few good ones among them, too. But I shall have to set about and get them colour fed, or I shall neither be able to sell nor be able to show, as judges will have them colour-fed or very little notice is taken of them." He sets about the ordeal, and it is long odds that "some are reight and some isn't" at the finish. I think it would be wise for every club to consider the matter very carefully and settle at once to have, say, Section A for colour-fed birds, Section B, natural colour; the judges to show every possible interest in either section. Then it would always afford fanciers a free hand to deal with their stock. Personally, I think there is nothing so beautiful as the Canary in its natural plumage, whether Yellow or Buff; but, as Mr. St. John concludes, "times and manners change."

A Hybrid Between an Antwerp Pigeon and a Ring Dove.

Sir,—Reading in these columns some time ago of an interesting hybrid between a Turtle Dove and Ring Dove, I am writing of one bred by me between an Antwerp Pigeon and a Ring Dove, the latter being the cock. Two young were hatched and one reared—a cock, too, and of a beautiful deep colour. I have plenty of witnesses who can vouch that this is true.

A. MUNTON.

The Fancy in Ireland.

Sir,—In reply to Mr. Connell, I beg to thank him for his kind remarks re my fitness for the position of corresponding secretary. Mr. Connell, you are making a grave mistake when you say I find Mr. South very useful, as I have stated facts, and the actual business transacted at the meetings, whereas yourself and Mr. South try to screen the society. You then refer to my "proof" of your proposing to expel members for writing anonymous letters to CAGE BIRDS; well, surely Mr. South (as corresponding secretary) is not reporting falsehoods? Mr. Connell, ask yourself this question: "Was the £1 special promised to the society before Mr. South's letter, or after?" Would you please quote the society's rule to expel members for exposing unscrupulous exhibitors? I challenge you to do so, Mr. Connell. Seeing you have taken a fancier's part who at the last meeting falsely accused another of writing anonymous letters to CAGE BIRDS, I feel satisfied as to what your definition of an honourable fancier would be. Re the Ligoniel members who left the society, if they would come forward the birds of another Ligoniel member could be accounted for, cup winners included.

"ONE IN THE KNOW."

[Certain paragraphs of the above letter have had to be deleted. Fanciers must surely know that we cannot publish with impunity statements of a seriously libellous character. Or do they overlook the saying, "The greater the truth the greater the libel," and the fact that the writer (equally with the publisher) can be cast in heavy damages at law?—EDITOR.]

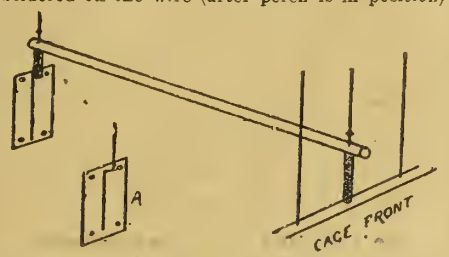
A Reputed Canary-Bullfinch Hybrid.

Sir,—Having read in CAGE BIRDS several times that no case of breeding between a cock Bullfinch and a hen Canary had been known, I thought it might interest your readers to give you an account of what I think is nearly a successful case. Unfortunately the bird has died, but I am sending it to your Mr. G. E. Weston in spirits, for his opinion. This hybrid was bred in my outdoor aviary, in which I have the following birds only: One Chaffinch, one Redpoll, one Siskin, one Linnet, two Bullfinches, all cocks; and two hen Canaries and two hen Greenfinches. I have had to keep the cock Bullfinches in separate compartments on alternate weeks, as they fought so much when together; but I thought it well to let them both have the opportunity of making friends, with the possibility of hybrids. From the above list you will see the only birds that could possibly have been the father; but, strangely enough, I have not observed any of them paying particular attention to the Canary. I noticed she had built some time ago in a retired nook in a rather inaccessible part of the aviary. She then sat steadily, and I recently concluded youngsters were out by her carrying off food in her crop in larger quantities than necessary for herself. But to-day (July 14) and yesterday she seemed to be away from the nest a good deal. I took the liberty of examining the nest, and found two addled eggs and the youngster (dead). It had evidently died a day or so ago, as there were the eggs of a meat fly on it, and it smelt rather badly. On examining this young bird I cannot help thinking, from the shape of the beak and the few wing feathers showing, that one of the Bullfinches was the father. I shall be glad of Mr. Weston's opinion. I have had a nest of Siskin Mules from the other hen Canary, and she is again sitting. One of the hen Greenfinches has paired up with the Linnet, and is finishing her nest; so I hope for some luck here.

E. A. CLIFT.

[The bird preserved in spirits sent me by Mr. Clift is, of course, very young, but it certainly exhibits every appearance of having had a Bullfinch as one of its parents. The head of all Bullfinch hybrids is quite distinctive (as practical breeders well know); and this bird bred by Mr. Clift has the typical Bullio hybrid head. It is a thousand pities it did not live. That Mr. Clift did not observe the cock Bullfinch paying any particular attention to the hen Canary is singular; whenever I have mated up a cock Bullie, either to a Canary or other hen, I have found him a peculiarly fussy and demonstrative husband. Mr. Clift is not quite correct when writing of having read that "no case of breeding between a cock Bullfinch and hen Canary has been known." Several cases have been put on record but do not seem to have been conclusively authenticated.—G. E. WESTON.]

A Bird Colony.



Pelican Island is one of the bird wonders of the world, where thousands of Pelicans breed. They are big, solemn-looking birds, as large as a goose, with enormous bills. They build a bulky nest with sticks and grass, lay four or five eggs, but seldom rear more than two young ones.

To Prevent Heavy Birds Getting Bad Feet.

Sent by H. Hines, 31, Glebe Street, Ashton-under-Lyne.

For Thrush or Blackbird cages, this is a very simple plan for fixing the perches to prevent the birds getting bad feet. All requirements can be got at any ironmonger's shop for a copper or two. First get a very tight spring (I make my own), which can be cut up in one inch lengths for the fronts of the perches, and two inches for the cage backs, as when on the bent wire at back (see illustration) the spring fits round the bent portion, which then makes it the same height as at the front. Make a perch with a hole through each end, to allow it to slide up and down the wire—with a little knob soldered on the wire (after perch is in position) to prevent it bouncing up (see drawing). A is a small piece of tin with a piece of wire soldered to it, and this is nailed on the back of the cage, after placing spring and perch on the wire bent for the purpose. With a pair of pliers then bend the top of the wire and push it through the back of the cage to hold it firm. When in position it acts like a branch of a tree, and it gives beautifully when a heavy bird comes down from the top perch to the lower. In conclusion, our sweet singing birds, they'll think it a treat, inventing a patent, protecting their feet!—Henry Hines.

A "Tit-bit" Holder.

Sent by J. F. Dunn, 17, Stanley Street, Eastbourne, Darlington.

I am sending a sketch of a simple way to make a small "tit-bit" holder, which, if carefully cut and folded, looks tidy and will be found to be very useful. It can be made of either tin or thin zinc. Cut out a paper pattern, as per sketch, and mark this on the tin or zinc. Cut out and fold up the dotted lines, and turn the top section over the opposite way, to hook on to the cage bars. This looks very well when enamelled over.—J. F. Dunn.

The Canadian Robin.

A pleasant feature of the homestead in the Far West of Canada is the Robin's association with it. He is about the size of a Thrush, and boasts a red waistcoat, which is not, however, quite so rich in colour as our own cheery bob's.

The Dabchick's Nest.

A writer in an Irish paper has an interesting paragraph upon the Lesser Grebe. He says that he does not think the nest reaches the bottom of the pond, but is moored to the aquatic plants growing near; and the mass of dead herbage, rushes, etc., with which it is built generate heat, which assists in the incubating of the eggs, as the old birds are occasionally off the nest for a far longer period than the generality of birds.

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE

The Bond of Good Fellowship Established.

Personal Thanks to Members.

I feel that I cannot do otherwise than express my gratification not only with the progress CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE is making in respect of membership, but with the kind expressions used in almost every letter received. Bird lovers whose very names are unknown to me write as though they were intimate friends, and my labours are thereby rendered simply a pleasant task. It is, of course, absolutely impossible for me to answer these kind friends individually, but I can assure them that their good wishes are very highly appreciated. There can be no possible doubt that one of the objects of the League—that of establishing a bond of good-fellowship—is already accomplished. I am sure that every owner of a CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE badge is looking out for some fellow bird-lover, and many will be the friendships established in consequence.

Societies Coming Along.

I am pleased to be in receipt of several letters, similar to that which follows, from Hon. Secs. of societies. I need hardly say that I have acceded with the requests, and I shall be very glad to send to any other Hon. Secs. applying copies of the aims and objects of the League, together with samples of the badges for the inspection of their members.

Sir,—We have several members wishing to join CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, and I should be pleased if you would send me particulars of the League and samples of the badges. I will be responsible for the return of the same, and I hope we shall get the whole of our members to join.

WM. COTTINGHAM, Secretary,
HYSON GREEN, NOTTINGHAM, C.B.S.

Our Free Booklets.

I have still some of each of the sixpenny pamphlets on British Bird Culture and on Canary and Hybrid Culture, and, as long as they last, one of either will be sent gratis to all new members applying for a copy at the time of joining. Those of the old members who have not yet had a copy may receive one of those reserved for them on sending a penny stamp for postage. Only one copy of either book can be sent free either to new members or old, and when the stock in hand is exhausted I may not be able to get a fresh supply, so that those who would make sure of getting one of these useful pamphlets should send on their applications with their membership fee without delay.

THE SUBSCRIPTION AND THE BADGES.

The subscription to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE is one shilling annually, and the badges sixpence or one shilling. The sixpenny badges are in three forms: (1) A button for coat lapel; (2) a pendant for watch chain, (3) a brooch for lapel, cycling cap, or for lady's wear. The badges at one shilling each are mounted in 9-carat rolled-gold, and are in two forms only: (1) A pendant for watch chain, (2) a brooch for a lady or for cycling cap or coat lapel. Members should distinctly state which form they prefer.

JUNIOR BRANCH.

The annual subscription to the JUNIOR BRANCH, for members under fourteen years of age at the date of joining, is sixpence. Price of badges as above.

PATRONS.

Ladies or gentlemen who are in sympathy with the objects of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE may give practical expression to that sympathy by becoming PATRONS of the LEAGUE and either making a lump sum donation to its funds or subscribing an annual amount of a guinea or upwards. One-half of such donation or subscription may be allotted to any individual object of the LEAGUE.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The qualification for Vice-Presidentship is an annual subscription of not less than half a guinea, and one-half of this subscription may be allotted to either the Literature Fund, the Defence Fund, or towards the purchase of special prizes to be given at any show nominated by the subscriber. Failing any such special allocation, the subscription will be devoted to the development and progressive work of the LEAGUE, to advertising its objects and promoting its ideals.

HENRY J. FULLJAMES,
Secretary, CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE,
154, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Mr. Fulljames has received from "Reginald Sparey, 5, John Street," two shillings for membership and rolled gold badge, but as no town is mentioned, the badge and receipt cannot be forwarded. Will Mr. Sparey kindly send the name of his town.

MORE VIEWS OF MEMBERS.

Sir,—Thanks for book, "British Bird Culture," which is full of useful information. I should think that after reading your notes in CAGE BIRDS of last week, fanciers will not delay any longer in joining CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE.

Scunthorpe. H. E. TUGBY.

Sir,—I wish you every success in your endeavour to range the lovers of cage birds into one body, and to establish a feeling of good-fellowship through the Fancy. CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE will attain these ends, and will show our opponents, backed up by men with fat pocket-books, that we are able to protect our hobby. Please enrol me and my daughter as members of the LEAGUE. We shall both be proud to wear our badges.

JOHN SANDERSON.

Port Glasgow, N.B.

Appreciation of Our Badges.

Sir,—I have received the rolled gold League badge with many thanks. I think it is a most beautiful and smart emblem, and one that all fanciers would do well to obtain, both Canary and British members. I have placed it on my watch chain, and it is where it will always remain. Should I come across any other wearer in my cycling excursions, I shall venture to have a little chat with the gentleman.

Bradford. J. H. JOWETT.

Going Solid for the League.

Sir,—I am pleased to say I have got four more members for CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. We are hoping to make our membership up to thirty, and we shall then think we have done very well. Hoping all other clubs will do likewise.

W. DOBSON, Secretary.

A Member from Overseas.

Sir,—I should like to become a member of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. I have been a subscriber to your valuable journal for many years, and have found it a most helpful friend. As for CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, it is the finest thing your paper has ever announced. I am more than pleased to see it going ahead so well; there can be no doubt that it will serve a long-felt want.

C. CHAMBERLAIN.

Port Elizabeth, South Africa.

Dubmire Workmens' Club C.B.S.

In his report of the above show the representative of CAGE BIRDS writes:

"The show was opened by James Robinson, Esq., who, in a really grand speech, gave his opinions on the subject of keeping birds in cages, his remarks indicating a thorough knowledge of the subject, and, touching upon the formation of the CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, he declared that this was just what was wanted at the present time to combat the evil influence of the faddists, who would deprive the working man of his hobby. He (the speaker) thought from what he had seen and heard that birds well cared for in confinement would just as soon be in a cage as be at liberty, and instanced several cases of which he knew."

The Right Type

Sir,—Perhaps it might interest you and some of your readers to know that all of the inspectors are not quite of the type sometimes represented. I have since being here had to go through the mill on account of keeping so many birds caged, and can only say that the three different inspectors that called on me on three separate occasions made things as pleasant as they could under the circumstances. I understood they had to do their duty, and did not fight against it. One told me some little anecdotes of the time when he, as a young man, once found a Cuckoo in the lane and took it home, intending to rear it. A then workmate seeing it, offered him half a crown for it, and he accepted it. Next morning his friend appeared with a very long face; the Cuckoo was dead! The old gentleman chuckled again at the remembrance, and told me such a thing as rearing a Cuckoo was never known before. I said, "Well, not often." Their visits are far from an unpleasant memory to me. I trust the League will be prosperous and do all the good expected of it. It is nice for us who cannot afford to belong to a good club, with its attendant expenses of showing, etc., to be banded together to do what we can to protect the Fancy. "Many a mickle make a muckle" is a true old proverb, and "Unity is strength" is another. With best wishes for all success to the League and to yourself in your trying duties as its Secretary.

(Mrs.) E. M. SARGIANT

Worcester.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. B. BOYD.—While anxious to further in every possible way the interests, individually or collectively, of members, it scarcely comes within the province of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE to make arrangements with farmers to especially favour its members in the pursuit of bird-catching. No doubt membership would be looked upon as a recommendation, where such is needed.

J. ROBERTSON, and many others.—Thanks for good wishes. You will see that I have made a reference this week to the many kind expressions received.

A Unique Consignment of Indian Birds.

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., Etc.

This contribution of Mr. Page's has been in type some time, but owing to pressure upon our space has had to be held over.—Editor.

One of the most important and unique series of birds imported of recent years, very many of them new to English aviculture, numbering some 700 specimens, and covering over 100 species, was recently landed by Mr. W. Frost, who has been collecting on behalf of E. J. Brook, Esq., whose series (at present consisting principally of Birds of Paradise, Lories, and Lorikeets, and already unique, as comprising many species not to be found in any other collection) will be still further enriched by this consignment—truly a feat of which any collector might be proud. It may well stand as the "avicultural event of the year"; for the task of bringing over such a number of small softbills is only known fully to the initiated, and though all the Sunbirds unfortunately died en route, the expedition must be accounted a great success.

By kind invitation from Mr. Brook I recently had an opportuntiy of viewing this fine series.

THE MINIVETS.—These I place first and foremost. They are dainty in form, and gorgeous in plumage. One can only regret that only two species are represented, and these will adorn Mr. Brook's palatial aviaries and bird rooms. Unfortunately there are none for distribution.

The Short-billed Minivet (Pericrocotus brevirostris).—This bird is a lovely species, known to Anglo-Indians as "the Cardinal Bird." It is about the size of our indigenous Flycatcher. The male, in colour, is black above, and flaming scarlet below; the hen is clad in grey and yellow. Both are exquisite creatures—truly "a sight for the gods."

In the same extravagant language I must perforce speak of the second species—the small Minivet (P. peregrinus)—whose graceful contour and fiery yet chaste beauty simply defy description. The mature male is grey and yellow above; below its colouration is like a "sunset cloud," to quote Mr. Frost.

FLYCATCHERS: This group is well represented, and they are charming birds, both in contour and beauty, and also possess the advantage of not being unduly difficult to keep—the species at present known in this country doing well on insectile mixture, supplemented with live insects of sorts. No less than nine species are represented, as follows:—Rufous-bellied Niltava Flycatcher (Niltava sundara)—a gorgeous creature clad in richest cobalt and turquoise blues and chestnut; Great-billed Flycatcher (Cyornis magnirostris)—another gem, blue above and orange-tawny below; Verditer Flycatcher (Stoparola melanops)—a beautiful silvery blue species. The above trio have graced the English show bench. Tickell's Blue Flycatcher (Cyornis tickelli) is a beautiful species somewhat similar in colouration to the Niltava, but more subdued.

The following are, I think, all new to English aviculture:—The White-eyebrowed Flycatcher (Cyornis superciliaris), which is a perfect gem, soft blue above, with white eyebrows and underpart; the Blue-throated Flycatcher (C. rubeculoides), which is dark blue above, with forehead and eyestreak of glistening blue, chin, throat, cheeks, and sides of neck dusky blue, breast and abdomen chestnut; Red-breasted Flycatcher (Siphia parva), and, last but not least, the Orange-gorgeted Flycatcher (S. strophiata)—a dainty gem, olive-brown in colour above, with white underparts, and a patch of rich orange on the throat.

REDSTARTS: These are another group of birds charming alike for cage or aviary. Their fearless and confiding (Robin-like) demeanour endear them to all who keep them. They do well in captivity on insectile mixture and live insects, but I have also found them to indulge in a little milk sop. Four species are represented:—The Common Rufous (Ruticilla rufiventris), the Blue-fronted (Ruticilla frontalis), the White-capped (Chimarrhornis leucophala), and Plumbeous (Rhyacophilus fuliginosus). A specimen of the last-named species has been in one of my aviaries since 1907; during that period it has passed through some severe English weather (out of doors all the year round), and is still living.

WAGTAILS: I cannot linger over descriptions of this, another fascinating group of birds, which must have a liberal supply of live food in captivity. Five species are represented:—The Black-headed Yellow (Motacilla feldeggi), Blue-headed Yellow (M. beema), Grey-headed Yellow (M. borealis), Forrest Wagtail (Limonidromus indicus)—not gorgeous, but very handsome, and one of the rarest of the series; the same applying to the Large Pied Wagtail (M. maderaspatensis), which is similar to our indigenous species, but larger. It is caged by the natives for its song.

Many other birds I can only quote the names of in passing:—

THRUSHES: Orange-headed Ground (G. citrina); White-throated Ground (G. cyanonota), and Blue-Whistling. Two beautiful species of Rock Thrushes are represented: the Chestnut-bellied Blue (Petrophila rufiventris) and the Blue-headed Blue Rock Thrush (P. cinclorhyncha)—both very rare and most desirable birds.

TITS: Two charming species are represented: the Green-backed (Parus monticola) and the Yellow-cheeked (Machlolophus xanthogenys)—both very rare and charming species, the latter possessing an upstanding crest. The former species I possessed in 1907. It was amiable in a mixed series, and was fond of live food, fruit, and monkey nuts; also helped itself to hemp and sunflower seeds, besides visiting the soft food dish.

Other rare and uncommon birds are:—The Pied Bush-Chat (Pratincola caprata), the True Persian Nightingale (Daulis golzi), the Ruby-Throat (Calliope camtschatkensis), the Red-spotted Blue-Throat (Cyanecula succica), the Chestnut-bellied Nuthatch (Sitta castaneiventris), the Racket-tailed Drongo (Dissemurus paradiseus), the Hair-crested Drongo (Chibia hottentotta), the White-bellied Drongo (Dicrurus caerulescens), the Sikhim Siskin (Chrysomitris tibetana), the Maroon Oriole (Oriolus traillii), and the Black-headed Oriole (O. melanocephalus).

Among the better known birds brought over I may mention:—Blue-cheeked, Gold-fronted, Small Ceylon, and Coppersmith Barbets; Gold-fronted and Blue-winged Green Bulbuls, Himalayan Black, Curl-Crested, and Brown-eared Bulbuls (the latter very rare); Silver-eared Mesias, Blue-winged Sivas, Black-headed Sibias, Shamas, Dyals, Wandering Tree and Blue Pies, Black-necked Grackles, Yellow-throated Sparrow, Cinnamon Tree Sparrow, Jerdon's and Black-throated Accentors, Ashy-crowned Finch-Larks, Malabar Starling (semi-albino), Tree Pipit, Rufous-throated Pipit, Spotted-wings, Large Pratincole, Little Stints, Blood Pheasants, etc. Babblers: Scimitar-billed, Common Jungle and Yellow-eyed; the latter makes a charming cage pet. Buntings: Pine, Eastern Meadow, Black-crested, White-capped, Grey-headed, and Japanese.

Here I must pause, where one would fain linger; but in a mere report it is impossible to do more than give the merest notice of such a huge collection. Before closing I must congratulate Mr. Brook on his enterprise and Mr. Frost upon the success with which he has carried out his commission, some extent of which may be gathered if I mention that now that they are landed it takes 1cwt. of insectile mixture per week to feed them, besides fruit, live insects, etc.

those in Mr. Brook's collection (which I have quite recently had the pleasure of inspecting) rather carefully and noted that the upper back in some specimens was distinctly more olivaceous, though the lower back seemed much the same colour in all.

Many specimens come over with their wing feathers badly broken, which is partly due to the fact that this is rather a restless species in captivity and partly perhaps to the fact that it is sometimes taken with lime (as Mr. Frost tells me) in a rather curious trap. A little hollow or trench is dug in the ground and limed twigs laid crosswise on the top. To make the matter clearer, we will imagine that the trap is a miniature railway cutting and the limed twigs bridges spanning the sides of the cutting. The mealworms (or other bait) are pegged down in the middle of the trench at the bottom. The Thrush enters at one end and proceeds cautiously along the railway line, so to speak. He seizes a mealworm and then comes the critical moment; if he only had the sense to creep out in the same manner as he entered, he would depart rejoicing and plus the mealworm. This, however, he never does: he scents danger and is anxious to be off, so he spreads his wings and springs upwards, thus striking one of the bridges (or limed twigs) and finding himself a prisoner. This trap, which is also frequently used for taking Shamas, is obviously the result of long and close observation of the habits of birds, but trapping in India has been practised through the centuries and brought to a high degree of perfection.

Some Recent Arrivals from Abroad.

The Exportation of Australian Birds.

The recent edict of the Australian Government prohibiting, as from 21st April 1911, the exportation of almost all species of native birds, "except for educational or scientific purposes," seems likely to be a serious matter for aviculturists. The full text of the proclamation may be found in the price-list of a well-known London dealer with the following comment:—"exportation.....has been stopped for some years in Queensland. The other outport is Port Darwin and, now that also is forbidden, these birds will be seldom seen in this country." It is not clear from the text whether the proclamation refers to the whole of Australia or only to Port Darwin; if to the latter only, it should be noted that, according to the statement of a friend, there was a similar ordinance in force some years since at this port which has not apparently been fully enforced.

The following is an extract from a private letter:—"In 1903, a man came on board at Port Darwin with hundreds of Gouldian Finches in small cages. He was interviewed by a representative of H.M. Customs who told him that the exportation of birds from the Northern Territory was illegal and that he would not be permitted to take them away. Later, as he had not acted on the hint, the Customs man opened the cages and set the inmates free. This much I can vouch for but I am not quite certain of the year."

I have written to a very well-known exporter in Australia for his opinion as to the probable future course of events and hope to have further particulars later on. In any case, putting the matter at its worst, some of the Australian species are likely to be "always with us"—the popular Budgerigar, the Zebra Finch (the breeding of which ought now to be a profitable undertaking) and that gem of the Dove family, the charming little Diamond Dove.

The Orange-headed Ground Thrush.

About a score of this handsome Indian species have been imported this summer and it seems likely that it will be more frequently seen in English aviaries in the future. Its pale orange throat and underparts and bluish back and wings are very attractive to the eye, whilst its pretty warbling song, which can generally be heard in the Western aviary at the Zoo, is another of its good points. Lieut. Kennedy wrote me that he could not recognise any definite sexual distinctions in the five specimens which he brought over this spring, but Dr. Butler notes in his latest work that the female has the "back, wings and tail tinged with olivaceous." I therefore examined

HANLEY C.B.S.

Annual N.F. Show, held Albion Hotel, July 8th Considerable anxiety had been manifested owing to several members experiencing heavy losses. Still, those who had young birds to show, rolled up well, and about 50 birds were staged. Mr. F. Bate judged, and gave every satisfaction. The weather was all that could be desired, and the room which was so kindly placed at our disposal, had plenty of light, and was well ventilated. The Norwich classes contained some promising youngsters. Mr. J. Williamson pulled off two specials. Mr. E. J. Robinson won two specials, one for most entries in show, and the other for most entries in Yorkshires. Mr. G. Lawton won special for best young Yorks. The Britishers were fairly well represented. Mr. T. Bates won spl. for most entries. The show was well attended. During the evening Mr. H. Hassell (Burslem) was made a member.

Wild-Bird Life.

Wild Birds and the Drought.

The lovely summer weather still continues, but the exceptional heat affects all animal life, and wild birds are no exception, although their mode of progression is so quick and easy that they are able to vary their conditions by moving from place to place; and if they are so inclined, they can spend part of the long hot day in the depths of some leafy wood or upon the hills where the conditions are more favourable. In such times as these wild birds suffer most from want of water. In some localities surface water is very scanty, and in such a summer as we are now experiencing it is altogether absent. The writer knows of one place, situated in a wooded district far removed from houses, where the only water for miles is a small pond at the edge of a wood; this is never very full even in the middle of the rainy season, and just now would be either at a very low ebb or altogether dried up. In a usual summer one can spend hours watching the different species of birds coming to drink and bathe, and being in a district thickly populated with feathered life there are always some at the water, as they come from miles arouud, and can be seen going in the direction of the water when one is not near it. In districts where water is fairly plentiful, birds have their favourite drinking place, which is generally some quiet stream or pool well removed from disturbance. While making a sketch near one of these favoured spots, we had a good opportunity of noting the different species and their behaviour while seeking drink. It is a question if the Linnets or the Starlings came the most frequently. There always appeared to be some of the former birds at the pool, although the species is not exceptionally plentiful in the district. It was noticed that the Starlings could not resist the pleasures of a bath whenever they came to drink. None of our British birds are so passionately fond of bathing as these glossy, sleek-looking birds. The Starling has a good deal of oil in the feathers, and it takes him some time to get his hard plumage thoroughly wet; but he manages to do it very effectually. Pigeons and doves are great drinkers, and are constantly visiting the pool; and when they arrive they fly straight to the edge and drink deep. After that they flap from side to side, drinking a little and resting, staying some time as if loth to leave the moist spot, and do not do so until the arrival of othersfi or if some squabble among the smaller birds startles them. Some of these visitors must come a long way to the water; those that still have nests on the higher ground are quite unable to procure water from the wheel ruts and pools along the cart tracks through the woods, and so have to wander away to the lower ground.

Identification of Nest.

F. J. W. S.—It is always a most difficult matter to correctly identify an empty nest, especially when removed from its surroundings. The nest sent was certainly built by one of the smaller migrants. It is rather stronger and more compactly built than that of the Whitethroat, Garden Warbler, Blackcap, or Sedge Warbler. The lining and other characteristics make me think it must be the nest of the Flycatcher, built in a rather unusual position.

In the Courts.

Alleged Advertising Frauds.

At Liverpool City Police Court on July 22 a man named Wm. Haynes, charged with obtaining a number of articles and birds by false pretences, was subsequently committed to the Quarter Sessions.

Prisoner, it was alleged, communicated with advertisers in different papers with a view to inducing them to part with their goods on the promise of value in money or other goods in exchange. He obtained in this way a piano, a gramophone and records, and a banjo and case, as well as a number of Canaries and cages. The advertisers, however, had failed either to obtain payment or the return of their property. —Haynes reserved his defence.—"Liverpool Post."

Concerning the above case, Mr. J. H. Jowett (Bradford) writes: I attended the trial. This man got a very expensive banjo from me, with case, also Canaries from another party, piano, gramophone, etc. I saw the Canaries he had obtained (two pairs) in a double cage, and they seemed very good birds.

Eleven Weeks for Stealing.

John O'Leary, twenty-nine, a costermonger, was charged on remand at Marlborough Street Police Court recently, with stealing a Linnet and cage worth 10s., belonging to Joseph Chapman, of Charlton Street. In the early morning of June 2, the prosecutor was aroused from sleep by the fluttering of his birds in their cages on the window sill of his bedroom. Jumping up, he saw the prisoner running off with a caged Linnet, which he had hooked down with a specially prepared stick. He was chased and caught by Police-constable Nightingale in Albany Street. He said he had bought the bird, and when told its value—10s.—at the police station remarked that that was all his horse cost. Previous convictions were proved, and Mr. Mead sentenced him to eleven weeks' hard labour for stealing the cage. —"Morning Post."

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be under sixteen years of age, and state whence stories are taken. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners-up.

*Linnet Feeding a Sparrow.

I fill my hopper very full every morning, and one evening I found it was empty, so I thought I would watch. I very soon heard two birds answering each other. I peeped outside the door, but they heard me. A day or so later I heard them again, and I looked outside and saw my Linnet feeding a Sparrow through the bars.—Geoffrey C. Grand, 95, Anson Road, Southtown, Great Yarmouth.

A Homing Budgerigar.

Father bought me a Budgerigar, which caused me much trouble by the way it squeezed itself through the bars of its cage, and we had to wait until dark before we could catch it. When we left for Norway, we took all the birds with us, and as it is very hot I kept them in my bedroom with the window open. Nearly every morning we see my Budgerigar flying about in the woods, but it always gets into the cage again in the evening.—Sent by J. F. Johanson, Skoghus, Snaroen, Kristiania.

*Preferred Cage Life.

One day, when my father was out on a little ramble, he noticed a bird's nest scattered about the footpath, and a poor little Hedge Sparrow making a most pitiful squeaking noise. It must have been the work of some cruel boy, because a cat could not reach where the nest had been. The poor little bird was too small to fly, and might easily have been killed by a cat or a dog. So my father brought it home and made a nest out of an old cap. We fed the bird with a little stick until he got big enough to feed himself. He soon got used to cage life, and would go in and out of his cage as he liked. One day we decided to let him have his freedom, so we took him out and opened the cage door, but he would not go. We could see by his manner that he really preferred cage life.—Sent by A. Gray (age 15), 1, Seymour Grove, Hope Road, Sale, Cheshire.

Club Reports.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Meeting held July 20th. The chairman, Mr. S. F. Whetton, presided. Quite a good number of members put in an appearance, which shows that Cardiff members have not forgotten where the meetings are held. I hope those who have not attended for some time will put in an appearance on August 17th, when the open show rules and classification will be gone into. After the usual business, Mr. Wilson gave us a very pleasant and most interesting evening in answering questions on the Yorkshire. A vote of thanks was accorded him, and he responded in an able manner. Mr. W. Jones was enrolled a new member. We have quite a good number of new members, which speaks well for our society.—J. W. Dummett, Sec.

NORTHERN LIZARD CLUB.

Meeting, July 22nd, Fawcett Street Cafe, Mr. Reid in the chair. A letter was read from the L. and L.F.A. challenging us to an inter-club fixture, to be held annually, the first fixture to be held in the North. It was carried unanimously that we accept the challenge, and the secretary was instructed to write Mr. Rukin. A communication from the Northern Crest Club was read, asking us to join the other specialist clubs in holding a grand presentation of prizes at the end of the season. This was well received, and the secretary instructed to accept same, two delegates to be appointed later. The conditions of our new bowl were then entered on, and ultimately it was decided that three nominated birds compete for it at each show; no member being allowed to nominate more than three birds; to be won three times in succession, or four times in all. Classification same as last year.—G. Davidson.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting held July 22, Fawcett Street Cafe, Mr. W. F. Swan presiding over a good attendance. The question of holding an open show this season was raised, and after a long and interesting discussion, which proved that the members present were in favour, the question was adjourned until next meeting, August 5, when we will go further into the matter. In the meantime members are asked to give it their careful consideration, and are invited to offer suggestions. The most important point to remember is finance. The feeling was that we should raise a reserve fund, so that we may meet our liabilities, should the show result in a loss, without having to subject the members to a levy after the event. Several of the members kindly promised donations towards such a fund, and I shall be pleased to hear from those who were absent to a like effect. August 5 we also hold our third F.F. Show, when Mr. H. Taylor will judge.—J. Jeffrey, Hon. Sec.

NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

Meeting at headquarters, July 19th, Mr. G. Nortlock in the chair, supported by a good attendance of members. Several nominations were handed in as a result of recent show, also prize money and specials given out. The recommendation of the London Federation of C.B.S., re Federation show, was discussed; decided that we support same if held. The Chairman called on Mr. H. E. Tringham to read his paper on "The Yorkshire Canary." Mr. Tringham stated that he had not been able to write out all he wished, owing to the short notice given him, caused through our having to reverse the lectures for July and September. However, it was soon apparent to all that we were in for a real treat, the subject being dealt with throughout in a masterly fashion, and all the most important points concerning this variety touched upon. At the close the meeting was open for questions. These came thick and fast, and were answered fearlessly and to the point. The Chairman, in proposing a vote of thanks, commented upon the vast amount of information they had been given, and he threw out the suggestion that we ask Mr. Tringham to let us have a few more notes at a future date. Needless to say, the suggestion was soon taken up by the members. Mr. Tringham, in his reply, very kindly offered to oblige again. A vote of thanks to Chairman concluded a most pleasant and instructive evening.—R. P. Harper, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN CREST CLUB.

Interesting Talk on the Crested Canary.

At the conclusion of the business of the meeting held on July 12th, at Newcastle, the Chairman (Mr. T. Robson) opened a very interesting talk on the Crested Canary of to-day. The gist of the talk is given below:—

Has the time not come, he asked, for us to establish a standard for Crests—to give so many points for type, so many for markings, and so many for colour, size, and formation of crest, and so on? We ought to have the birds more neat than they are at present. We seem to have forgotten everything in our endeavour to get the large crest. At present the Crests are far too rough, and have too much body feather. I would say let the crest count half at least of the points. We ought to try and get the birds more like the Norwich in type and quality of body—close feathered. I would really like to see them as neat as the Border Fancy, but, of course, not so small. More attention ought to be given to the beauty of shape. Another thing, we have far too much green blood in our birds; we seldom see the clear body, dark crested birds that were seen so frequently a few years ago.

I like to see a neat crest, with a beautiful droop, I care nothing for the large, flat-crested birds that we see so much nowadays. I would like to see more attention given to the breeding of clear body, dark crests; wing marked, dark crests; clear body, grey crests, or the cinnamon crests, with the nice, Norwich shaped body. It is a pity we don't pay more attention to quality.

Mr. Riseborough recalled an incident where a gentleman gave a special prize for the best bird in the show. As usual, it went to a Crest. Upon seeing the winner the donor said "I never meant the prize to go to a bird like that. I would rather it had gone to a bird such as the Norwich or Yorkshire."

Mr. Robson then found himself bombarded with questions.

Mr. Hutchinson asked "How do you suggest commencing to breed out the heavy feather?"—Introduce a little Yellow blood, but if it is not done carefully you will lose size.

Mr. Riseborough said that recently they had been trying to get more size into the Lizard by introducing the Norwich; but the birds soon fell away, and went back to the original type.

Mr. Crawhall spoke about the standard of the Crested Canary. Judges, he said, seemed to pay no attention to it; they always gave preference to size of crest and body.

Mr. Currah was in favour of more Yellow blood. In the first place, he said, the Crest is an artificial production, and as long as the craze is for large crests we will have to try and breed them.

Mr. Crawhall termed the Crest the Brahma or Cochin China of the Canary tribe—the soft feathered bird of the Canary family. And he was afraid that we would find it a very difficult task to produce them as fine in feather as the Border Fancy.

Mr. Swan favoured the use of more Yellow blood. We ought, he said, to suggest that societies put on more Yellow classes, and if these were not a success the club might render some assistance.

Mr. Taylor thought that our club should insist upon having more Yellow classes at shows receiving our patronage.

Mr. Robson suggested a better classification, such as classes for clear body, dark crest, or dark capped; wing marked, dark crest; and so on.

Mr. Taylor said that he had introduced Yellow blood, and had bred as good a bird as ever graced the show bench; but he found that too much Yellow blood was not a success. It would never do to breed Yellow and Buff year after year, the same as in other varieties.

Mr. Robson said he thought we ought to get the "too much variegation" out of Crests—try and get more lightly marked birds.

Mr. Dobson made a very good suggestion, viz., that the club give a special for lightly marked birds, such as clear body, dark crests, or wing marked birds, as without doubt they were the most beautiful of the crested variety.

Mr. Hutchinson thought that if societies put classes on they need not lose anything, as prize money could be paid according to entrance fees.

Mr. Crawhall said that it was a very difficult thing for societies to make their shows pay.

Mr. Taylor said that in his opinion we ought to instruct the judge to give the special to the most typical bird shown by a member (Norwich type).

Mr. Taylor then proposed, and Mr. Dobson seconded, that we draw up a standard for the club for future years, so as to make the patronage of our club worth asking for. This proposal was carried. If any member cares to send in any suggestion to me I will be obliged.—J. G. Hutchinson, Sec. N.C.C.

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Meeting held July 20th, headquarters. A fine muster of members turned up. Chairman Willmott presided, and after two new fanciers were proposed and admitted as members, the Chairman said he had a very sad resolution to propose, and asked that same be entered in the minute book: "That the members of the South Birmingham O.S., at the monthly meeting assembled desire to express their heartfelt sympathy with Mr. J. H. de Mailett on the irreparable loss he has suffered through the death of his wife." The resolution was passed, the members standing. Mr. J. H. de Mailett responded, saying that such an act and such kind words would help him to bare his great loss. The chief business was the second N.F. Show, to be held July 22nd. All business connected with same was soon proceeded with, the allotting of specials and arranging of birds best suitable for the side gas lights, selecting of special show stewards and time for receiving birds. No time was wasted and after the Chairman had announced he intended giving a cup for competition at the members' first annual show, to be held, he hoped, on December 26th (loud cheers), the meeting terminated. It will interest many to know we secured two more members at the show, as per report in paper, making 38 members to date, and Mr. Kidner has promised a useful prize for the members' show as above. So roll up, join and help the society. We shall arrange a grand winter programme at August meeting.—J. Sheppard, Sec.

LONDON C.B.A.

General meeting held "Feathers," July 12th, Mr. T. Miller in chair, supported by a fair number of members. After the usual routine of business (including the nomination of Messrs. H. and L. and Miss M. Bousfield, all of Bournemouth), the secretary read a paper by Mr. T. Sandiford on the subject of colour feeding. After explaining the growth of the pods, etc., and mode of preparation for the market, he impressed upon fanciers the importance of breeding birds for colour, without which it was impossible to colour-feed to perfection. The mode of feeding adopted by Mr. Sandiford is to put all youngsters on the feed at 7 or 8 weeks of age, commencing with one teaspoonful of feed to a pint of egg food, and gradually increasing same daily until they are on to the full quantity. The old birds are treated in like manner. The proportions advised by Mr. Sandiford are: To one egg add three ounces of stale bread, 1oz. of colour food and 3 teaspoonfuls of fine castor sugar, but in the event of biscuits being used, no sugar should be added, there being sufficient already in same. He also advised removal of the seed hopper for 6 or 8 hours daily to ensure the food being wholly consumed. Also put in the bird's drinking water twice a week a small piece of sulphate of iron, about the size of a split pea, which helps to fix the colour and also acts as a tonic. When the birds are finishing the moult the feed should be reduced in the same way as starting. At the conclusion of the paper an open discussion took place, various opinions and expressions being exchanged; and the meeting ended with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Sandiford, which was carried unanimously. There will be no meeting in August.—W. H. Mugford, Hon. Sec.

LEIGH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Seventh annual N.F. Show, held July 22nd and 23rd, Railway Hotel, when there were about 80 birds on view, which should have been judged by Mr. C. Houlton (St. Helens), but somehow or other he did not come. But we secured the services of Mr. R. H. Davies (Leigh), and his awards gave perfect satisfaction. He received many thanks for helping us out. The principal cup point scores were: Messrs. W. Ordish 18, D. Banks 16, and H. Taylor 15. Scores for British section medal: Messrs. J. W. Hampson 6, and Gaskell Bros. 6. It was a very good show considering we were about three or four weeks too late for some of the members; and the exhibits were better than we have had for some time. The open Linnet class might have been better, but there was a singing contest on at Leigh, and some of the good Linnets were busy. I am very pleased to say our members turned up strong, and did all in their power to make the show a success, helping in a way that showed the true fancier spirit. NOR. YELL., ETC. Second N.F. Show held Victoria Rooms, July 22nd. Entries did not turn up in quantity as was expected, but some very fine birds were staged. Mr. Blanchon won special for most points at 2 N.F. shows. Mr. Trueman won special for best bird, with an excellent young Norwich. Mr. Barker (Bentley) judged, and gave entire satisfaction. There was a judging competition which was won by Mr. Pogmore, who gave five correct awards out of 7. The society is now making rapid strides, new members being enrolled at each monthly meeting. It must be very encouraging to our members to know that Mr. Barker (Bentley) an old exhibitor of British and Foreign birds, has kindly promised a cup (valued £1 1s.), to be called "The Francis Barker Challenge Cup," for the best British Softbill not larger than a thrush. Members were unanimous in thanking Mr. Barker for this kindness.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Annual Nest Feather Show held Oldham Hall, Liverpool, July 22. Being the last show in the district it does not get the support that is accorded to the earlier ones. The entry was very poor. This is slight encouragement for the hard-working secretary. For years it has been the custom to meet all the old fanciers gathered together, to see who had bred the best coloured youngsters. Many a heated argument has arose, as to which bird would moult out the correct shade, and after frequent wagers had been settled at the local hostelry, all went home in good spirits, vowing vengeance on each other at the first patronage show. We were delighted to see the novices well to the fore; probably it would be a good idea if the F.F. shows were left to the novices—it would give them a little encouragement. Yellow greens were in advance of those of previous years, showing a better ground colour, and pencilling well defined. Mr. Brundell won with a neat typical bird, but some were of the opinion it will be on the small side. Mr. Wardale's yellow should moult out a topper. "Another glass-house winner, Tom?" Buffs were only fair outside the winner, which looks like a hen, and, if so, will hold its own later on. Norwich Greens were very few in numbers, but Mr. Pyko (Preston) put down a rare team. Pity there was not more competition. Mr. W. C. Thomas sent a nice collection of Borders. His even cinnamon mark was a picture. The champion specials were captured by Messrs. Brundell, Thomas, Pyke, and Wardale; novice specials, Messrs. Pritchard and Mockridge. The attendance was very good, but all had the same tale—the worst season they had ever experienced for years; so many youngsters dead in shell. It was quite a relief to hear a fancier say he had got a decent bird or two. Mr. A. Wellings placed the cards, and gave entire satisfaction.

YORKS., GREEN, SELF, ETC., YELL.: 1, vhc, Brundell, neat, typical, and straight as a pencil, even shade of ground col., well pencilled; 2, hc, c, Wardale, long, racy, and well filled in neck, nice shade of grass green, improved much in afternoon; 3, Mockridge, Yorks. throughout, a trifle blurred in colour. DITTO, BUFF: 1, Mockridge, straight as a rush, grand quality markings, looks like a hen again; 2, Metcalfe, big and lengthy, rare col., rough in feather; 3, Pritchard, nice quality and col., broke into moult; vhc, Brundell. NOR. GREEN, YELL.: 1, 2, Pyke, two rare youngsters for size and col., wee bit harsh in feather; 3, Bratherton, nice type and quality, good ground col.. DITTO, BUFF: 1, 3, Pyke, rare head and neck, nicely pencilled, well cut away; 2, Bratherton, topper for col. and pencilling, good back and compact. VARIEG. YELL. YORKS.: 1, Pritchard, cinn., long, racy, and well drawn, wonderful legs; 2, Metcalfe, nice type and feather; 3, Mockridge, really good bird, but breaking up. DITTO. BUFF: 1, Pritchard, plenty of leg, nicely filled in neck, well braced wings; 2, Mockridge, very much down when we were taking notes. CL. BUFF YORKS.: 1, Pritchard, topper for size, long drawn wings, good stock bird; 2, 3, Brundell, nicely moulded buffs, round as a pencil, and straight with it; vhc, Metcalfe. BORD.: 1, 2, 3, hc, Thomas, splendid team, put down in fine trim, should hold their own; vhc, Bratherton, nicely marked buff green, broke up a bit, else might have been higher.

A Fearless Curlew.

The Curlew is one of the most shy and wary of birds. Yet a reader informs us that he knows of a hen bird that has nested in the same spot for four successive seasons, and that she is so tame that he is able to stroke her and lift her off the nest. With strangers she is almost as fearless; standing a few yards away, she screams at them incessantly, doing her best to drive them away.

To My Dead Linnet.

Oh, little bird in garb of russet hue,
There never was a singer like to you—
So passing sweet the lilt of your sweet song:
I could have listened to it all day long.

And now you lie there cold, and still, and dead,
A bunch of feathers and a drooping head,
And when the day dawns with its morning glow,
The world seems silent—for I miss you so!

And all those days are gone for you and me—
And never will they come again, or be
So full of music to my loving ear—
For the brown bird is dead that was so dear!

—Mrs. De Courcy Laffan, in the "Evening Standard."

Mr. McAlpine has been a hard-working member since the formation of our society, and he will be very badly missed, as he did his work without grudge. All cage bird fanciers are invited. We will meet at 7 p.m. when we hope to have a good, jolly concert.

The friends of that well-known breeder of Belgian and Scotch Fancy Canaries, Mr. John Fairley (Coatbridge) will be pleased to learn, writes "Scotch Fancy," that his eyesight has so much improved that he is now able to follow his occupation as before, with very little restriction. He has had a very successful breeding season, having some very promising Belgian youngsters and Scotch Fancies on the sticks, with one or two nests still to come. He has to report a few losses (like others) during the season, principally during the last very hot spell of weather we had. The birds have been much under the care of his son during the breeding season.

OBITUARY.

Mr. GEORGE HALL (Dewsbury).

It is with great regret that I have to report the death of one of our members, Mr. George Hall, who met with a fatal accident during his employment, writes Mr. S. Shaw, secretary of the Dewsbury and Dis. C.B.S. Mr. Hall was held in great respect by all who knew him, and the Dewsbury Society have lost a hard-working member. The sympathy of all is extended to his widow, and we trust that some small ray of comfort will come to her out of the thought that others are sympathising with her.

A Collector of Moss.

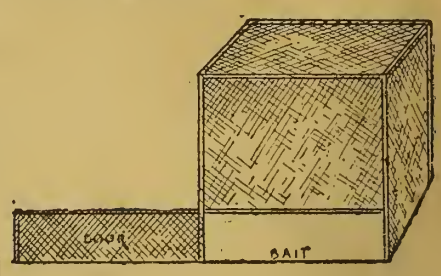
The Hedge Sparrow is an early nester, but no matter how soon in the year he commences his household arrangements, he always manages to include a fair amount of moss in his neatly-built nest. This adds greatly to its beauty, and there are few more charming pictures than a well-constructed nest with its lovely blue eggs.

Snipe and Cuckoo's Eggs.

Although the Snipe is a small bird, it lays quite a large egg—much larger than that of the Cuckoo, which lays a small one for its bulk. The size of the eggs aids no doubt in the deception practised upon other birds, for in many cases it is a difficult matter to detect the Cuckoo's egg when placed among the eggs of the future young one's foster parents. Many nests have been found containing a Cuckoo egg in the clutch, but young nest-hunters have failed to identify it.

Yorkshire Canary Club.

Will members who have recently changed their address and have not notified me of same, please do so at once for correction in the new handbook? Any fancier desirous of becoming a member should at once send on his name and address along with 2s. 6d. annual subscription. Novice members of the Yorkshire Union are especially invited. The Club is offering £5 to be competed for by novices in the novice classes (Yorkshire Section) at all Union shows.—John Greaves, secretary, 279, Hollings Road, Bradford.



Scottish Plainhead Club.

Secretaries desiring the Club patronage for their shows who have not sent in their applications are hereby reminded that the same must be in my hands by August 15. Confined club show secretaries are requested to apply for the patronage, provided eight of their members are members of the S.P.C.; that they provide at least five classes for Norwich Plainheads; and that their judge is a member of the S.P.C. Will members please note that subscriptions for the current year are now due, and should be paid early? Further, I have to draw their attention to the special prize fund which is raised annually for the purpose of providing specials for the Club Show, and I trust it will reach respectable dimensions this year.—J. Brown, sec.

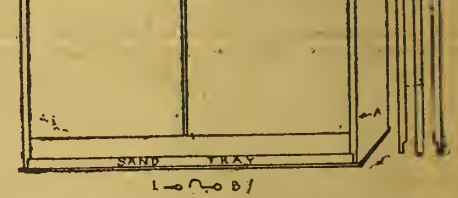
A Handy Bird Trap.
Sent by Mr. G. W. Parker, Mount St. Mary's College, Chesterfield.



The diagram is a sketch of a trap which may be built at the side of an aviary. It may be useful to some of your readers. It is simply a square frame made of wood, with wire netting stretched over it. The frame is of very light material, and built with posts driven into the ground. A space must be left at the front as in diagram. A hinged door must be put on. Bait where the space is left, and birds will come down. Then rush them. They will always fly into the cage if their backs are turned. You can now shut the door, and, entering the cage from the aviary, secure the birds. I have found this trap very successful indeed.—G. W. Parker.

No. 531.
A Large Detachable Front.
Sent by Mr. T. Burns, 30, Hammond Street, Newcastle,

I enclose sketch, which I think will be useful to some of your readers, of a detachable front for a three-compartment cage. To make, half-lap each piece of wood at corners (see sketch A). It only requires two screw eyes and two hooks for each end of cage (see B). The cage requires to project top and bottom half an inch for front to rest on; place under top ledge which will hold it firm. I also send sketch of a useful perch (see C). This perch is placed between the wires and rests with slot on cross bar; and it is a good red-mite catcher. You can take this perch out of cage without putting your hand inside of cage, and you will find the red mites collected in slot and easily removed.—T. Burns.

The Turtle and Ring Doves.

Although the Turtle Dove is closely related to the Wood Pigeon or Ring Dove, it differs from that bird in two very important habits. The Wood Pigeon we consider a resident bird that rears more than one pair of young during the season, whereas the Turtle Dove is a migratory bird, and only nests once, and will often miss a season if its two white eggs are interfered with.

Snow Bunting Breeds near Cardiff.

The Snow Bunting has been found breeding upon the Flat Holm, Cardiff. This bird breeds regularly in the Shetland and Faroe Islands, and on two occasions—in 1886 and 1888—nests have been found in Sutherlandshire. This has been hitherto its southern breeding limit. This Spring a party of Cardiffians were on the Flat Holm. One of them, while rabbit shooting, saw a little bird get up, and without thought he shot it. Near the spot he found the nest and eggs. He gave the bird to another of the party, who took it to Mr. J. Mountney, Royal Arcade, Cardiff, who identified it as a Snow Bunting. The bird has been presented to the Welsh National Museum.

No. 10.—My Cherry Finches.

Many years ago I was down East on a bird-hunting expedition. It was early spring and a raw, cold, cheerless day, when the streets were thick with fog; and the rime covered everything with an icy coat. Nobody but a real bird enthusiast would have left the warm shelter of the fireside, but for such the weather has no terrors. I started out early in the afternoon, and did not get home till the gas lamps had been long lighted, but there was ample to reward me, for in a small travelling cage I carried half-a-dozen shivering little specimens of avian life. I was forcibly reminded of the story told of a certain learned professor. One day he was telling us of an eight or ten hours of a sleety day in February, which he had spent cold and damp and hungry in the shallows of the Firth of Forth. "I had no companion," he said; "and I had nothing to eat or drink. I was wet through, my hands were half frozen, and I was chilled to the marrow; but, gentlemen, I was amply rewarded, I became the happy possessor of no less than three of these beautiful little creatures, these Dorises," and he held up a phial containing three hardly visible little bladder-like creatures.

Well, when I got home, I had to answer a whole shoal of questions. Where had I been; what had I found; how much had I spent? I hedged as long as I could. I spoke of the charm of the London fog, the comparative clearness of the streets (they were clear because nobody could see his way about) and the delight of trying to recognise familiar landmarks. But still the bald insistent question kept on with monotonous repetition—what had I bought?

At last in sheer exasperation I tore off the paper covering; and exposed my latest purchases—half-a-dozen greyish little birds with plum-coloured caps, and grey lines on their waistcoats.

Costly Beauty.

I felt inordinately proud of my latest acquisition, yet they did not seem to impress my company. The hard metallic question was repeated once more—and what may you have given for those things? It reminded me of a visit I lately paid to an ecclesiastical shop in Westminster with a young layman, on Altar candlesticks intent. In the shop, I must confess that my companion's first question was a little injudicious. Pointing to some very perfect copies of 15th century Altar candlesticks, he enquired in rather a brusque tone: "And what do you want for things like that?" "Things like that!" came the answer in tones as cutting as a chisel: "Things like that are five guineas." I tried my best to smooth things over, but alas the mischief was done, and the rest of the interview was decidedly strained; and I was quite glad to escape from the shop.

I felt now, the only thing was to put on a bold front and answer my tormentor bravely. Speaking in what I hope was a steady voice, I replied, "I gave exactly £3 3s. for those little birds." "You gave what?" was the horrified rejoinder. "Three pounds," I answered—I forgot the shillings—and then I bolted till things had calmed down.

The little birds I had been so fortunate as to secure were Australian Cherry Finches, a very rare and I regret to say (though I must say it, if I speak the truth) a very delicate species when first imported. In the first place there is not much of them to start with, and secondly they always arrive in a very picked and naked condition; owing to the kind attentions of some member of the company. I have generally found that if you can save four out of six Cherry Finches, you will do exceedingly well. Sometimes I have had to be content with two, and at times, alas, with none out of the consignment.

As the weather was exceedingly raw I knew that I had my work cut out for me. Fortunately, I have invented a little apparatus to keep newly-imported Australian Finches alive, till the weather moderates; and it answers equally well from Cherry Finches to Bourke's Parrakeets. It consists of an ordinary wooden travelling cage, with a circular hole cut in the bottom. Stand this on an ordinary round biscuit tin with the top off and holes perforated in the sides for ventilation. Fix a bit of perforated zinc over the bottom of the cage; put a night-light in water at the bottom of the tin and light it, and you have a really perfect life-saving apparatus that will last practically for ever, the whole costs you next to nothing. It is a grand idea, and will save you immense sums of money and annoyance.

I went up to my room; got the apparatus to work and then popped in my new arrivals. It was quite pretty to see how they lined up on the perch, and smuggled down over the genial warmth. The comfort of this apparatus is that it cannot get out of order, and it will burn from 8 to 12 hours, according to the night-light. The only thing to discover is the right height for the birds above the light. This you can easily judge by putting your hand on a level with the perch. The fumes given off by the night-light are very slight, and pass away through the open front of the cage. I am afraid to say how many hundreds of birds I lost before I found out this simple invention.

Saved by a Night-light.

I started with six birds, and by the time the weather was fairly warm, I had still five left—two cocks and three hens, all in perfect health and plumage. Of course you must be careful to harden off gradually. At first I kept the apparatus going night and day, but as the weather gets more genial, I gradually drop the heat in the days, and only turn it on again as evening begins to fall. The birds soon know the time, and get quite rude and impatient till I light up, when they at once settle down for the night over the flame; their breasts showing quite ruddy in the glow of the flame.

At the end of March, I took away the heat and put the birds into a big box cage, but took the precaution to throw a cloth over the front of the wires at night, as unlike many Australian Finches, Cherry Finches do not seem to like a box, except in the breeding season, and the change from the heating apparatus to a box perch would be too sudden altogether.

The feeding of Cherry Finches is simplicity itself. They want nothing but canary seed and water. When the summer was well advanced (and by "Summer" I do not mean that beastly treacherous month which Chaucer for some unknown reason christened "Sweete May," but the end of June) I turned my friends out into a nice sheltered garden aviary, and awaited results. One morning, while I was watching the inmates in general, the Cherry Finches in particular, I saw a cock Cherry Finch come and perch on a branch just close to my head and commence to sing. This he did by raising himself on his heels, twisting his neck into a corkscrew and wildly jumping up and down on the bough. But not a sound reached me. Then he assumed his natural perkiness, took a short rest, and then began de novo. He reminded me of the old ballad:

"And when he came unto the end
He did begin again."

The Dawn of Love.

I saw a little hen, or rather I blush to say two little hens sitting demurely in the shade and listening intently. Presently one made a fierce dash forward, and the other lady retired with all possible haste. The cock then joined the visitor, and when I left them they were sitting side by side like two lovers on a summer's evening in Hyde Park, and quite as unblushingly.

I was much interested and encouraged, as I quite thought that a nest would ensue. In about ten days my expectations were realised, for on peeping through a knot hole at the end of the aviary, I espied a neatly built nest in a box tree, about 2½ feet from the ground, and by careful, patient and silent watching, I saw it presently visited by the pair of Cherry Finches; the cock with a feather in his beak, with which he proceeded to ornament the nest. The nest was oblong and made of dried grass most skillfully woven together, with the entrance hole turned towards the east. I found long afterwards that it was warmly lined inside with chicken feathers.

My one and only fear now was that the nest would be drowned by some pleasant little showers such as we experience in this little island of ours. I determined accordingly to do what I could to prevent this. I went and found an old umbrella, which I rigged up over the bush. It was, of course, a risky thing to do, as many birds would have resented my interference and have deserted incontinently. My Cherry Finches did not seem to mind; perhaps they appreciated my thoughtfulness. At any rate, they went on with their family arrangements quite calmly. At the end of three weeks I heard little sounds emerging from the nest; but of course I did not care to look or even go near. All I could do was to exercise my rare and difficult gift of Patience, and try not to burst with curiosity. About a month after I heard the noise, I saw three little Cherry Finches near the nest. They were rather small and slight; and with hardly any crowns, but anybody could have told they were Cherry Finches. The parents were most attentive and evidently very proud of their family.

If anybody had told me I should be able to breed Cherry Finches at the first attempt, I should have probably been as sceptical as Mr. Bultitude in "Vice Versa," who when given bills of parcels to do, was disgusted at their glaring improbabilities, as a business man.

"That which no god dared promise to my prayer
The wheel of time brings of its own accord."

I had quite a heated discussion with a birdy friend as to how I had managed to do it. It reminded me of the story told of Henry of Exeter and Archdeacon Sumner. "It only remains for me," said the Bishop, "to return to Exeter and pray for you." "No," said the Archdeacon, turning pale, "don't do anything uncharitable." I tried to soothe him, but I only seemed to add fuel to the fire. "The blindest of all blind people," I said, "are those who have quite made up their minds not to see, and the most miserable of all hopeless ones are those who wilfully turn their backs on Hope when she stands at the near corner holding out her hands rather timidly." He seemed to take my words as personal because he had a Cherry Finch sitting on a nest of eggs. What was the good of Hope when I had a nest come off? He was as hopeless as poor Vedrine when, with tears in his eyes, he was told that Beaumont had won the Great Race. As for myself I could feel nothing but gratitude and I felt as the French say that to Providence ji devais une fameux chandelle.

Wild-Bird Life.

Birds Among the Corn.

Following the exceptionally fine summer weather, we naturally get an early harvest, and in many districts the reapers are already busy breaking up the big patches of standing corn into rows of sheaves, giving variety to the fields and slopes of cultivated ground. The cornfields are the homes of many of our most interesting birds, attracted by the myriads of insects that lurk among the standing corn. On a hot still day there is quite an audible "hum" caused by their movements, many of them are so small that they are almost invisible to the eye, but birds must have keener vision than humans. One can frequently get near enough to see the movement of the birds' beak, but not the insect that is taken. We associate Swallows and Martins with buildings to which they fix their nests, and watch them darting down the streets and across the village pond; but now the street is practically deserted—the birds, like many others, seeking the cornfields to spend the long summer's day hawking over the tops of the swaying stalks. The gentle breeze moves the uncut crop, causing the insect to take wing and so become an easy prey to insectivorous birds. On the edge of the field the Flycatchers use the fence as a perch, occasionally launching themselves into the air on long fluttering wings. They dart a few yards over the tops of the corn, and as quickly return. The Whitethroat repeats the performance upon the other side of the field, where the thick hedgerow and rank weeds give him the shelter he loves. He is a flycatcher by habit, but with this difference: he invariably seeks his prey by flying upwards, whereas the true Flycatcher darts downwards, or occasionally on a level with his perch. Many of our warblers haunt the cornfields, and for the time being compete with the spotted bird for a share of the insect life that is so plentiful. Sit quietly, and the graceful Willow Wren will almost come within arm's length in his search for prey. He clambers up the stalks of the corn, the wild parsley and the huge docks, with their clusters of russet-coloured seeds; he hunts under the leaves and among the matted stems, snapping at a passing fly, or chasing one for a few yards. Further along the hedge, where the bushes are tallest, the wary Butcher Bird watches for the larger prey. His hawk-like eye is keen and bright, and no passing bee or hurrying beetle escapes his notice. He is a butcher by trade, and many a luckless one is spitted in apparently wanton cruelty.

*Music-loving Swallows.

A pair of Swallows have lately taken up their abode in our church. They have built their nest between the wall and an angel. The birds fly in and out of the windows as they like. They appear to enjoy the service very much, and when the hymns are sung they fly round and round, chirping very sweetly.—Sent by Dorothy Lawrence (age 13), Mill Lane, Robin's Bridge Road, Coggeshall, Essex.

His Way of Getting In.

A few months ago I had in my possession a bird which we folk call a "Joey." One day I let the bird out into the brewhouse to stretch its wings. To prevent it from going into its cage for a while, I shut the door and turned round to do something else. On looking at the cage I found, to my surprise, that the bird was inside. Of course, I began to inspect the cage to see how Dicky had got in. After looking at the wires for a while, I found that the bird had managed to squeeze itself through the fountain-hole, and so got inside. I let the bird out as before, and it got inside the cage just as I thought it would.—Luther Neale (age 13), 31, New England Street, Long Lane, near Halesowen, Worcester.

*Peculiar Nesting Places.

Three peculiar nesting places for birds were to be seen recently in the garden of Mr. Taylor, Northwich. At the beginning of March Mr. Taylor noticed that the birds were damaging the buds of certain trees, and with hopes of keeping them away he put up a "scarecrow," with a bowler hat on top of it. Imagine his surprise the other day when he found a couple of Wrens had built a nest in the hat. Strange to say, about two feet away a pair of Robins had nested in an old can, and they are feeding four young ones; whilst in another part of the garden a couple of Tomtits have seven eggs in a nest constructed in a piece of old stove piping.—Sent by D. Lycett (age 14), Apedale View, Chesterton, Staffs.

CANARY QUERIES.

Crest-bred Thin.

C. Roach.—Cage the Crest-bred hen by herself for a fortnight or so and treat her as follows. In the first place see that both cage and bird are free from insect pests, and keep cage floor well strewn with clean gritty sand. Give an unlimited supply of plain canary seed only as staple diet, and in addition give every second day half a teaspoonful of summer rape in the egg drawer. On the alternating days give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and lightly dusted with soft sugar. Give also a pinch of maw seed on these days. Twice a week in addition to the above give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, linseed, and broken groats. Give a half-ripe plantain stalk or small spray of seedy chickweed every second day. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece for two consecutive days, and afterwards add two drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid to the water every second day for a week. Let it have frequent opportunities for bathing whilst the weather keeps so warm. You might also stick in the wires a small cube of hard common salt for it to peck at when so disposed for a time.

Rather Varied.

Pit Laddie.—(1) You did wrong to bind the toe backwards, as it is certainly not a case to require such treatment. Remove the band now and bathe the foot for a minute or two in very warm water, then immerse it in cold water in which you have dissolved a little common salt for a minute or two. Dry it gently, and paint all over foot with a feather dipped in Frair's Balsam. Give it one well-fitting, ordinary-sized perch, and one about the thickness of a lead pencil. Keep cage floor and perches clean, and the toe will probably come right again. Feed bird same as advised to "C. Roach," but give half-a-teaspoonful of egg food or crushed sponge cake on the days when you are not giving bread and milk for the next week or fortnight. (2) I suspect these birds have been plucked, either by the parents in the nest or by each other since leaving the nest. Watch them carefully, and if you find one or more plucking feathers, cage it or them separately until after the moult. The plumage will probably be reproduced during the moult. Slightly anoint the bare places twice a week with sulphur ointment until you see the new quills coming through skin. (3) The difference between yellow and buff is that the former is an even, solid yellow colour, more or less intense, whereas buff is a yellow colour suffused over the surface with a white, dusty, mealy appearance, as though the plumage had been dusted over with a white, powdery substance. This mealy appearance is caused by the extreme tips of the feathers being white, instead of a solid yellow, and is most pronounced on the head, neck, back, and shoulders. You would find these details fully explained in the pages of "Our Canaries," and the coloured plates of yellows and buffs in this work would also help to make the matter quite clear to you.

Makes Wheezy Noise.

Novice.—You will never do any good with this bird. It is quite useless keeping him mated up now, as I take it is the case, and even if there were any real hopes of breeding with him it is extremely unwise to attempt to propagate his kind. You may try what the following treatment will do for him. First see that cage and bird are quite free from insect pests, and keep cage strewn with clean, gritty sand. Keep it in a nice bright airy position, quite free from draughts and extreme fluctuations of heat and cold, and do not hang near a fire or window, near or over burning lights in the evening, nor high up near the ceiling. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day for a fortnight and twice a week afterwards for another month give half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and on the alternate days a third of a teaspoonful of maw. Give a spray of seedy chickweed three or four times a week. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and afterwards give 20 drops of whisky, six each of oxymel of squills, and syrup of tolu, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, every second day for a fortnight. If a good improvement is apparent after this time, give for another week four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid, every second day to close treatment. If not much better write again, giving particulars again, and referring to this reply.

Grey Lice and Voice.

J.W.H.—(1) The treatment you have tried is of little use at all in such a case. If you are expert at hand-washing the best and quickest remedy would be to wash the bird twice with an interval of one week between, and to each pint of the first and second waters used add a teaspoonful of Creolin. At the same time wash out the cage thoroughly with warm water, to each pint of which you have added a teaspoonful of Izal or Jeye's. If you cannot wash the bird, catch it, and blow a liberal supply of pyrethrum powder into the plumage, particularly around base of neck, tail, on shoulders, and under wings. Use a puff or small bellows and plenty of powder. Then roll bird up in a small handkerchief, leaving only the beak exposed for free breathing, and lay bird down (inside a temporary cage for safety) for a quarter of an hour, and meantime wash out cage as above. Then release bird and let it shake and preen its feathers well before returning it to its own cage. Repeat this operation every fourth day for a fortnight. Continue the quassia baths for a time. (2) Your surmise as to cause of the loss of voice is doubtless correct. It is sheer folly to hang a bird which is usually kept in the kitchen, out in the open once or twice perhaps in the course of a year. If it were accustomed to being hung out regularly, or even frequently, in fair weather, it would take no harm, but to hang it out first once by chance is most injudicious. Keep it in a bright, airy, but not draughty, position, not near a fire, and give 20 drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, two of eucalyptus, and so much chlorate of potash as will cover a threepenny piece, well shaken together in the water, every second day for a week or fortnight as may be necessary.

Two Norwich Hens.

S.G.McC.—(1) The clear buff hen is probably a trifle weak in constitution, and might also have been overworked in showing or breeding, or both, last season, which would account for her vagaries this season. I would advise you to show her but very little this coming season if you wish to get young off her next year. For the present cage her alone, and, if possible, out of sight and sound of cock birds, and for a fortnight restrict the diet solely to plain canary seed, with a free supply of various green food, and every second day add ten drops of syrup of buckthorn to the drinking water. At the end of the fortnight add a pinch of summer rape to the diet twice a week, and a small teaspoonful of egg food each time until she begins to drop feathers, and then put her on the usual regular supply of colour food. Aim at a simple and wholesome plain dietary, with plenty of vigorous exercise from now until next spring. (2) I do not think this hen will be any use at all for breeding, and should discard her. It is impossible to say whether she is a wild specimen or not from your description, but I should hardly expect such to be the case. You might treat her for a week the same as the initial treatment advised above for No. 1, and afterwards give 20 drops of whiskey, six each of oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together in the water every second day for a week, and twice a week for a fortnight give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. A mealworm a day for a time would do this hen much good.

Twitching on Perch (A.L.).—It is simply due to constipation. Restrict the diet to plain canary seed and a free supply of green food daily, with no extras, for a week. In the drinking water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence daily for three days, and every second day for the remainder of the week. In the following week give four drops of tincture of gentain and three of dilute sulphuric acid every second day.

Noise in Throat (No Nom-de-Plume).—I do not think the treatment you mention was advised in this column. Neither do I think there is much, if anything, wrong with the birds. If they are caged together I think it is not unlikely that what you call choking symptoms are simply due to the birds making grimaces at each other. Anyway, you may try the following feeding and treatment. For one week give nothing but plain canary seed and a free supply of green food, and every second day add six drops of glycerine, as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence, and half as much chlorate of potash to the drinking water. After this add half a teaspoonful of summer rape to the seed diet every second day, and on the alternating days give twice each week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on each of the remaining days a spray of green food. Let them have plenty of fresh pure air, but avoid draughts and great fluctuations. If not considerably better after a fortnight of this latter treatment write again, referring to this reply, but if they are better continue it for another fortnight.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES, AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

Feeding a Linnet and a Mule (Jas. Godfrey).—Your best plan is to invest twopence-halfpenny in a copy of Nutshell Booklet No. 2 upon the "Linnet." Send the stamps for it to the Publisher, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, E.C. This booklet will give you all the information you require, and at far greater length than I can do in this column, concerning the Linnet and its management and feeding. If there is any particular point upon which you require advice, I shall be pleased to give it. What kind of bird is it that you refer to under the name of "Bullfinch Mule"—what were its parents? There are several kinds of hybrids which may have a Bullfinch as one of their parents.

About a Jay (R. B.).—You should feed your Jay upon exactly the same lines as recommended to "Sparrow" in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS. The cage must be a large one; in fact, there is no real limit to the size, the bigger the better, according to the space at your command. In any case, it should not be less than 4 feet long, 20 to 24 inches wide, and 2 feet high. There should be two perches—one at each end of the cage—fixed about eight inches from the side. The cage should be wired at the front only. Let the bird have a bath frequently—every day during this kind of weather. It is best to have the draw-board (sand-tray) lined with thin sheet zinc. Keep the cage very clean.

A Jackdaw (Cicero).—Feed your bird on exactly the same lines as recommended "Sparrow" in last week's issue. Also note the reply given to "R.B." this week. You cannot now do anything with that leg which has set (after being broken) in a crooked manner. It should have been put into "splints" immediately after the accident—suitable pieces of wood tied over a cloth bandage would have answered; or a big strong quill, split. The leg will need to be re-broken and then properly set, an operation I am dubious about recommending, unless, at least, you consult a veterinary surgeon.

Concerning Nightjars (W. W.).—I do not remember ever to have seen a Nightjar exhibited. As a matter of fact, it is a peculiarly difficult species, which very few people could hope to successfully keep alive, and one that would never survive the ordinary show routine. It is not on the list of desirable exhibition birds adopted by the National British Bird and Mule Club. The Nightjar has been successfully bred in captivity in Germany—in the face of tremendous difficulties, according to the narrative of the aviculturist who achieved the feat. A personal friend of mine, Mr. P. F. M. Galloway, has succeeded in hand-rearing a Nightjar and keeping it alive and in excellent condition over a goodly period of time. But he, also, had great difficulties to overcome—difficulties that would inevitably "floor" the average bird-lover, who has neither the time nor the opportunities for collecting the necessary live-foods which he enjoys, to say nothing of the skill acquired by long experience. I advise you to let Nightjars alone. An account of Mr. Galloway's experiences appeared in "Bird Notes" (the journal of the Foreign Bird Club). If you were to read this, I am sure you would follow my advice!

A Song Thrush (Brownie).—There is no sex difference in the plumage of Song Thrushes—the only sure way of distinguishing cock and hen is by the song. Your bird is, I should think, a recently caught specimen, or it would never dash about the cage in the manner you describe. So it is not necessarily a hen, for you could not expect any song from such a bird after being caged only a week. It will have to become steady (overcome its wildness) before you can reasonably hope to get any music. You should put the cage in a light corner of a room (but so that light direct from the sky does not fall on it), wherein people are constantly moving about. Do the necessary feeding and cleaning very quietly, and offer the bird mealworms direct from your fingers. It will then soon overcome its nervousness. But it may not become really tame until after the moult (now close at hand, no doubt). Note the reply to "Cleopatria" this week.

More About the Song Thrush (Cleopatria).—You should send 2½d. in stamps to our publisher for a copy of the "Nutshell" booklet on the Song Thrush, which will give you very full, up-to-date information concerning the feeding and management. Also note the reply given "Brownie" this week. You can pay anything from 7s. 6d. to 20s. for a first-class tame (not recently-caught) Song Thrush in full song. Of course, Song Thrushes can be bought at a very much lower figure; but not steady birds in song. You might succeed in breeding Thrushes in a cage (a very big one) but the odds are heavily against you. It is not true that all the youngsters in the first nest are cocks. I was told so when I was a school-boy; but I soon found out that the information was wrong. It is quite a matter of individual taste; some people prefer the Thrush's song, some the Blackbird's. I have a sneaking preference for the music of Master Golden-bill. True, the music of the Song Thrush is more free and loud and joyous; but, then, I am never very joyous except on pay-days and holidays, which, may be, explains my choice.

A Mixture (H. Boddy).—Your guess is absolutely accurate: what with work and the answering of these queries, I can hardly find time to eat, sleep, and drink, the latter being perhaps the most important item this 'orrid 'ot weather. You are not the only person who finds it extremely difficult to lay hands upon really good exhibition specimens of the various British birds. First-class show birds are, like angels' visits, few and far between. It is usual to find some of the "old faces" at the top of the classes year after year. The would-be exhibitor needs always to be on the look-out for likely birds in the rough (if he can recognise them) at the bird-shops or catchers. And some people, of course, are very much more favoured than others in this respect, inasmuch as they reside where a number of shops, etc., are easily get-at-able. I know plenty of enthusiasts who spend an astonishing number of hours in quest of future winners; and it is a case of few prizes, many blanks, too. Occasionally a good bird is picked up at a reasonable price from the show bench, while I know one or two people who don't seem to mind much what the price is so long as a bird is a winner. There are several ways of acquiring a "noted team." Sound judgment is an important factor; but there is an element of good fortune about it, too. If I had the space, I could relate some interesting incidents on this score. Most of my own birds I acquire at intervals at London bird-shops. The best way is to see the birds and select one's own. It is not so much a question of price as of accurate selection. A house-moulted proved muling British Goldfinch, if a good ordinary specimen, is worth 7s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. A house-moulted Bullie with two claws missing is of no value except as a pet—if rich in colour, 4s. or 5s.

Sexing Nestling Mules (Micky).—There is no method by which the cocks and hens can accurately be told, for both sexes are alike when in nestling plumage. It is true that the experienced breeder can make a practically accurate forecast, but I am thinking of the man of small experience in muling. And it adds enormously to the difficulty when the young Mules are seen singly. Get the whole of a brood together, and then it should be possible for a cock or two to be sorted out with some certainty. In the case of Linnet Mules, go for the birds which are the warmest in ground colour—the likely hens will be of a decided silvery-grey tone, especially on the throat and breast, whereas the likely cocks will be a warmish-brown, often with a faint tinge of yellow on the throat. The same applies to Goldfinch Mules: choose the deepest coloured youngsters, with the brightest wings and longest heads (when viewed in profile). Size, of course, is in all cases a promising sign. The stumbling blocks for beginners will be any yellow hen Mules (when a yellow hen Canary has been used), for these are better, so far as colour goes, than cocks bred from buff hens. They are generally, however, appreciably on the small side, and not hard to spot when viewed with other Mules which may have been bred from the same parents. Pleased to hear of the benefits you have derived from CAGE BIRDS, also that you intend to join the LEAGUE.

A Mule Problem (S. Harris).—I have never yet seen a clear or lightly-marked Goldfinch Mule that could not quite easily be told from a hen Canary; and if I was shown such an alleged Mule I should decline to believe that a Goldfinch had any part in its parentage. Given a genuine Mule (either cock or hen) the sign of the Goldfinch is plainly to be discerned, both when the bird is in nest-feather and when it has completed its autumn moult. The fact that your friend claims to have bred one clear yellow, one ticked yellow, and one ticked buff, all in the same nest, is also against their genuineness (that is, from my own point of view, for such good fortune is too good to be true). Your remark about the thick, heavy beaks confirms me in my doubts. Further, your statement that this trio came from a buff hen Canary clinches the matter completely. He will be a lucky chap who breeds two such yellow Mules from a buff hen; don't you think so, too? If you take my advice, you will keep your money in your pocket, and not worry about buying this hen. You would, I think, find a more profitable use for it in betting your friend that he has made a mistake, and that his Mules are just plain every-day Canaries. I can quite believe that somehow or other he has fallen into this error honestly; but that it is an error I am quite sure. In reply to your question, I most certainly agree that it is possible for the Goldfinch to influence the colour of Mules—more so, in fact, than a great number of breeders seem disposed to admit.

More Cuckoos; also Some Mules (Mrs. Sargeant).—I have to thank you for a highly interesting letter, though I am sorry to say that I am afraid I can offer you very little in the way of advice. Your interest in Cuckoos is really phenomenal; and certainly you achieve remarkable success with them. To take the Mules first, I am glad to hear that you have at last succeeded in rearing some, and I hope both the Greenies and the Linnets will moult well. Most Greenfinch Mules carry their wings fairly well braced; but a trifle of "gayness" in the wing-carriage is not at all a serious fault. Further, it is not easy to judge in young birds exactly how they will behave in this respect when adult. I am pleased to hear you have found the malt and cod liver oil so excellent for the Cuckoos. When moulting, I should feel inclined to vary this with cod liver oil and syrup of hypophosphites (in combination, of course). With all due respect to the opinion of the person you mention, I certainly think that the growth of the feather is affected from the inside, and that the oil in the food is all sufficient without any oily application externally. Personally I should not apply olive oil outside. I should prefer to spray with water made just cloudy by the addition of one or two drops (not much) of Scrubb's cloudy ammonia. Try this, any way; it can do no harm. It is the male bird only which calls "Cuckoo." At the same time, when the bird in question dies (may the evil day be long postponed), have it examined, and its sex determined. It is not beyond the bounds of probability that a captive hen might utter the "cuckoo" call of the male.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

Aviary and Budgerigars.

Phœbe.—Your aviary will accommodate thirty to forty Budgerigars, yet I advise you to commence with not more than four pairs, only three would be the better—as if you get, say, one pair imported birds and two pairs of aviary bred ones, the latter two pairs from different sources, you will be able to mate up unrelated pairs of your own young birds, choosing only the largest, strongest, best coloured and well feathered birds for stock purposes. The three or four pairs should be secured at once so as to get them settled before the winter. For any birds, no matter how hardy they be, the open front of aviary should face as near south as possible, and the north and east sides should be close boarded, if possible. I think Budgerigars would winter safely in an aviary open all the way round (centre of lawn aviary), providing there were snug roosting places and backs in gable of roof, but it is subjecting them to an unnecessary ordeal to put them in any aviary through which the wind can blow without restraint at any season—they may survive, but they ought not to be subjected to it. But I take it your roosting place forms the back of your aviary, and if so, this will give the birds all the shelter required. Your book gives you full details as to diet. They eat a daily supply of seed about equal to, or a little more than, that taken by a Canary.

An Ailing Cockatoo.

Magrath.—In such cases it is a case of persevering. You cannot very well give the Chemical Food too strong, so long as the bowels are kept well regulated by occasional doses of Dinneford's Magnesia, as already advised. A very fine (dust) sprayer is the best for soaking a bird's plumage with insecticide; and I strongly advise such in your case and the persevering with a weak solution of fir tree oil as the insecticide; it will, however, be a lengthy job, but there is hope for a gradual recovery. A good seed mixture consists of canary, millet, paddy rice, hemp, oats, sunflower and maize—the whole well mixed together and the two first items in as large a bulk as the bird will take them. Also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts (in variety) and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone continually in the cage. A pinch of grit (not sand) should be added to the daily supply of seed. Continue the use of Chemical Food and Dinneford's Magnesia as advised in our previous reply. A small quantity of either boiled potato, turnip, carrot and the like, is good for it, provided it is unseasoned and without gravy. Treat the bird as above for a couple of months and then report progress.

Foreign Birds for Cages.

Gcomic.—If you want to breed birds in these cages, you must only put a single pair in each cage—choose from Zebra Finches, Cutthroats, Bengalese, White Java Sparrows and Long-tailed Grassfinches. There was an article recently, "Breeding Foreign Birds in Cages," from my pen in this paper, you should refer to same. If you merely wish for a few pets and not to attempt breeding in one cage you could keep Gold-breasted, Grey and Orange-cheek Waxbills and Avadavats, not more than one dozen all told. In another cage you could keep odd males, Orcy and Green Singing Finches, Napoleon Weaver, Alario Finch, and Long-tailed Grassfinch. All the following are attractive, hardy, cheap and easy to keep: Spice Birds, Silverbills, Bengalese, Green Avadavats, St. Helena Waxbills, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins; Bib, Striated and Sharp-tailed Finches. "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1s. 1d. post free from our Manager, would greatly assist you. Diet for above: Canary, white and spray millet seeds, green food, grit, cuttlebone and water.

Ailing Green Amazon (Perplexed).—Spray or bathe the nostrils twice daily with diluted glyco-thymoline till relief is given—no harm will be occasioned if the bird swallows a little. Once a week (say for a month or a little longer) give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water. Seed mixture: Two parts each canary and white millet and one part each oats, hemp, maize, paddy rice and sunflower seeds—well mix, and keep a supply in the cage, adding a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply. Also supply ripe fruit, nuts (in variety), plain biscuits, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone continually in the cage.

Is it a cock? (Daillecourt).—Your bird is a young cock Violet Tanager, the dark violet-blue of the upper parts will appear in due course. The hen Violet Tanager may be roughly described as olive-green above and yellowish-olive beneath. No, do not leave him out of doors for the winter, all the Euphonia are very susceptible to cold and it would succumb; it should be brought indoors at the end of October and should safely pass the winter in a roomy cage in any temperate room, or would do so in a greenhouse having a fairly dry atmosphere and a minimum temperature of about 50 degrees F.

An Ailing Tanager (Zebra).—Yes, it is a bit of a puzzle, but if it can be brought round there is no reason why it should not live several years with you yet, though many do not last as long as yours. In periods of extreme weakness use the brandy and water as a stimulant again. As regards diet, supply ripe fruit ad lib, ants' eggs, a mealworm, spider or two, and mix its sop as follows: Boiling water, Nestle's milk, Mellin's food, and crumbled sponge cake—mixed to form a fairly sloppy sop. Do not overdo orange, banana is a much safer fruit. Soon grapes, pears, etc., will be available and form a welcome change. Do not mix much sop, but keep a little always in the cage.

What Birds, and Aviary Queries (Black Stone).—Both your birds are undoubtedly cock Combassous, being out of colour when you bought them, though not agreeing well together, I doubt if their combativeness will extend beyond obstreperous sparring. Be the aviary, I am assuming this is weatherproof, and if well lighted it apears to me to be well arranged and should give good result. A well lighted inner compartment is a desideratum of any and every aviary, the wire portion might be extended with advantage. I much fear the Finch tribe will get gradually killed off by the Budgerigars, though many of them may linger a long time. You have accommodation for about forty birds the size of a Budgerigar. By arranging a thick cover of twiggy branches at each end the danger of maiming, etc., will be considerably lessened.

Hardy species for Outdoor Aviary (Beginner).—You would find "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1s. 1d. post free from our Manager, very helpful. The following readily do well with beginners, and are hardy and long lived once they settle down in their quarters, but the first few weeks are always a critical period with newly imported birds. Zebra Finches, Bronze Mannikins, Java Sparrows, Cutthroats, Bib Finches, Spice Birds, Bengalese, Magpie Mannikins, Gold-breasted Waxbills, Avadavats, Silverbills, Green and Grey Singing Finches. For these you must supply canary, white and spray millet; a little paddy rice, a few oats, also green food, cuttle bone, grit and water for drinking and bathing. When they have young to feed a little of some good soft food mixture must be supplied (see our advertisement columns).

Blue Mountain Lorikeets (H. B. J.).—(1) The matter of the incubation I will deal with next week. (2) The eggs are usually deposited in a hollow branch, a log nest is the most suitable, or a box with concave bottom covered with a little sawdust. (3) Usual diet should suffice, viz., milk sop and ripe fruit; if the birds show any liking for a little seed, by all means let them have a little, but the supply of sop and fruit should be continuous. We should be pleased to hear result.

Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

M. A. L. (Fulham).—A very advanced case of Septic Fever.

A. Locke.—Acute inflammation of the bowels. The symptoms were evidence of pain. The cause is due to the introduction of irritants taken in with the food. I do not think ptomaine changes had anything to do with the trouble. Carefully examine your seed and see whether it is free from mould. Thoroughly clean all seed before feeding by rubbing it with a clean damp cloth, and keep your feeding pans scrupulously clean.

A. Hamilton.—Rupture of a small blood vessel on the lungs resulting from congestion of these organs. The primary cause is the heat oppressing the heart's action and bringing about engorgement of the lungs with consequent hemorrhage. Full-blooded, robust birds, particularly cock birds when in full song, are more susceptible to this change.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

A most successful show of Canaries in first feather, at Park Chapel Schools, July 22nd, when 77 birds were staged. Mr. P. Mason (Windhill) officiated as judge, and his awards gave entire satisfaction. A valuable list of special prizes has been obtained for members to compete for throughout the season's competition, only the four highest birds of each exhibitor to count towards these prizes. The winners of most points in their respective sections were: Messrs. Stables, Allen, Northrop (champion), Messrs. Rushworth, Wroe, E. Riley, Hardaker (novice), and Messrs. J. Gregson (extra novice). Many young birds of high promise were staged, and visitors to the show were well satisfied at the quality throughout. CHAMP.: CL. YELL. SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Second N.F. show held July 22 under ideal conditions at the Sydenham Hotel, Small Heath. Sixty-one birds were staged, against 66 at the last show, but the quality was far superior, and many prize-winners at the local shows had to take second place. Mr. J. H. Roe commenced judging at 5.30, and he was kept at it until 7.30. A nice steady flow of visitors filled the room all the evening, and one was sorry to give the order for birds to be packed at 9.30, as many were still coming in. We have again to thank our host and treasurer, Mr. Lechie, for loaning us the room and placing such a splendid spread for the judge and members. The room is most ideal these summer evenings, as both members and visitors took the chance of a stroll on the lawn and the gardens. Two more names were booked for membership. A profit will result, although admission was free. The chairman announced that he should present a cup for the first annual members' show, and Mr. Kidner also promised a most useful prize for the same event. We are hoping our treasurer will be able to let us have the room for December 26. We should then have the best that has ever been held in the Midlands. The membership will total 40 at next meeting. Winners of specials: Silver medal for best bird, champion class, Mr. Derry; ditto, novice, Mr. A. Fields; 2/6, best champion Yorks., Mr. Kidner; ditto, second, Mr. Fields; tin of distemper for most points, Mr. Clay; Yorks. show cage for most points in novice class, Mr. Constable; 2/6 cash best Nor., novice, Mr. West; ditto, best champion Nor., Mr. Derry; tin of distemper for best Border, Mr. Walton; pocket knife, best, vhc, novice, Mr. Twist. The show manager again proved his worth, as the birds were staged satisfactorily. Show stewards, Messrs. Constable, Murray, and West; they had a very busy and trying time, for which the members one and all thank them.

PORTSMOUTH C.B.S.

Second annual F.F. Show held July 12th, Long's Memorial Hall. The show was a success both in entries and attendance, better than last year. One important new feature was the novice classes for those who had never taken a first prize. The Chairman, Mr. Newberry, worked hard in getting together a good number of articles for specials from the tradesmen for the best vhc. These brought a good entry and many good specimens, and no doubt will give a good account of themselves later. The prizes were presented by Mrs. Newberry at 8.30, who made a very nice speech, and was presented with a shower bouquet of carnations by Miss Doris Smith. Mr. H. Young placed the cards for the Canaries, Mr. A. Hilbury the British and Foreign, to the satisfaction of all. The Secs., Messrs. King and Joiner, and committee, carried out their duties in good style.

Correspondence.

How to Prevent Drinking Water from Freezing.

Sir,—Would you mind putting this small hint in Cage Birds on how to prevent water from freezing in the water pots and tins during very cold weather? In the winter time I have a half-gallon bottle of boiled water in my bird-room, of course giving it when cold. I put in the bottle of boiled water one teaspoonful of glycerine, then give my birds it at night. This prevents the water from freezing. I have tried this, and had success, and it will be helpful to some fanciers.

Is it Cruel to Keep Birds in Cages?

The Case of a 13-year-old Chaffinch.

Sir,—As a regular reader of your excellent paper, Cage Birds, I should like to draw your attention to the case of a cock Chaffinch now in my mother's possession. We first made his acquaintance at a bird stall thirteen years ago, and as he was bad in the moult, minus his tail, etc., we got him for the small sum of threepence. He was by no means a young bird then, but he is now in full plumage, and as gay as ever. So I cannot see where the cruelty of keeping birds in cages comes in at all, and it is very few wild birds that live to half the above-mentioned age. I wish your paper every success.

What a Startler!

Sixteen Young Thrushes in One Nest.

Sir,—When near Epsom a day or two ago I was surprised to hear a noise in a hedge bottom. Looking about I found a Thrush's nest, and it contained no less than sixteen fully-fledged Thrushes. Is this a record or not? Should like to know through Cage Birds.

W. Clegg.

[We should imagine this to be the easiest record ever put up. We are sorry our correspondent did not send us the nest which held the sixteen fully-fledged young Thrushes—it would no doubt have come in handy as a waste-paper basket, and our present utensil is getting rather dilapidated. When we ourselves went to Epsom we only succeeded in backing one winner, but possibly Mr. Clegg was more fortunate, which might account for his seeing sixteen Thrushes all in the same nest!—Editor.]

Interesting Observations at Everberg Aviaries.

The Young Feeding the Young.

Sir,—When your correspondent, Mr. Millsum, tells us, with many expressions of astonishment, that young birds of an early brood will feed those of a later, he is certainly not telling us anything new—indeed, the only surprising thing is that there should be one reader of Cage Birds who is unacquainted with the fact. Hundreds, or perhaps thousands, of your readers must have heard one of Mr. Kearton's lectures, at every one of which this fact has been mentioned, and a photo shown on the screen, portraying a Robin in the act of feeding young Thrushes. In last week's "Field" an instance was given of a Thrush feeding young Linnets (a softbill feeding hardbills!). Everyone who has a garden must have noticed young Robins feeding those from later nests. Lastly, every Canary breeder must be well acquainted with this fact. When, however, Mr. Millsum tells us "without boasting" that he has "kept and cared for more living birds in captivity than anyone living to-day," he is certainly telling us something which we none of us knew. Perhaps, however, we are not intended to take this literally. How fervently I wish that more of your correspondents possessed the gift of imagination, then we should not have the same things said in the same way about the same old birds week after week! I hope Mr. Millsum will send us another of his delightful letters before long. I like them.

A Young Skylark Problem.

Sir,—I am a lover of Skylarks, and have kept them for some years with every success. This year, having the offer of a nest of young, I took them with the object of hand-rearing a contest bird or two. In the issue of Cage Birds dated June 8, 1907, there is some advice in an article by Mr. A. C. Allaway on the selection and preparation of the Skylark for singing contests, and how to hand-rear, which I followed to the letter (as I thought). It was as follows: "Take half a teacupful of boxings or pollards; be sure it is clean; add to this half a hard-boiled egg which has been pressed through a grater, white and yolk together, and one teaspoonful of grated bullock's liver; scald altogether with boiled milk, not too sloppy. The above is enough to make for about half-a-dozen birds." Having only four birds I used half that quantity, made fresh every day, and fed them about every half-hour with a bit as big as a pea from five in morning till eight o'clock at night, and was careful in having sweet and clean grater, feeder, and glasses for holding food. In spite of all this, and having nothing else to do but look after them, they all died after going on well for just a week. Would a reader kindly tell me where I went wrong, as I am quite at sea. I may say I have reared other birds from nest at different times, and once took a Cuckoo from a Hedge Sparrow's nest and reared it on green caterpillars. I am getting another nest of Larks, and have sent for "Nutshell No. 3." Shall I succeed if I go by above, or should I do better if I fed on insects? I could capture such as flies, earwigs, worms, woodlice, grubs, and green caterpillars (not hairy), spiders, maggots, etc. I have a good bit of garden, and plenty of time on my hands.

How a Winning Bullfinch Was Produced.

Sir,—I appreciated much your kindness in portraying my British Bullfinch on the front cover of Cage Birds. The bird, in my opinion, deserved such a position, and I am pleased your decision was a similar one. Being sent to some thirty leading shows it was never in a single instance out of the money. The bird, when procured, was certainly very much in the rough; in a wretched condition through ignorance, being freshly caught, and having been wrongly treated. I could see quality in it, so purchased it for a small sum. In the course of a few weeks the bird developed almost instantaneous perfection, and it was possible for me to show him with the above success. Here are a few brief remarks upon my successful management of Bullfinches, without doubt one of the most affectionate and friendly Bullfinches procurable: Cage, 20 by 15 by 10 inches; note large size. Seed: Canary, sunflower, rape; occasionally a little hemp and mixed seeds (but very few); one mealworm daily. Ripe fruit and berries, especially blackberries and privet (these are particular items); the quantity is not in any way limited, for the birds are allowed just whatever quantity they wish to eat. Seeding heads of wild plants are very much relished, especially dandelion. A daily bath for certain is of the utmost importance to obtain condition. A little colour food in the moult helps, but this should be very limited.

Ribbon Finches Breeding in Cages.

Sir,—I have had a handsome pair of Ribbon Finches for six months in a large breeding cage, and in the spring the hen laid altogether fourteen eggs, very irregular in size, and sometimes with very soft shells. On the advice of a friend I gave some crushed eggshell, and immediately the cock began eating his mate's eggs! The weather got cold, and the hen showed signs of egg-binding, and at the thirteenth egg was so ill I picked her up as dying and saw a large egg within the abdomen. I gave brandy, anointed with oil, and steamed her over a cup of hot water, as I had done before, but she seemed so ill this time I had given up hope of saving her. She made some effort to expel the egg when revived with the brandy, so I risked inserting a feather dipped in oil, when the passage opened, and I was successful in saving her, as she dropped the egg (a large one with hard shell) into the water. She took hours to recover, then laid a normal egg without trouble next morning. This was promptly eaten! The pair are very affectionate with one another, and go to sleep in a cocoanut shell. We had some extremely hot weather, so I hung the cage in the garden and fed plentifully with grass in flower. The birds both looked the better for the blazing sunshine, and commenced building with the dried grasses, and soon the hen commenced laying again. This time she was quite well and laying each morning, a prim, small, cream-coloured egg, not transparent like the last lot. Fearing the cock would eat them again, I removed them with a spoon and put in "dummy" eggs, meantime procuring a pet Canary from a friend. She took no interest in the new eggs, which I kept three days in cotton wool in a very warm room over the kitchen on hot pipes that pass under the floor to heat the towel-rails in the bath-room. The birds are in this room at an even temperature, so the eggs never got chilled, and I handled them most carefully. On the fifth day I saw signs of the hen Ribbon Finch sitting, so I returned all her eggs. They were all promptly covered with grasses and she then sat close, laying two or three more fine eggs—I can see six, but fancy there is another hidden by the grasses, which they keep building higher and higher to the front of the nest and arrange and rearrange many times a day. The hen sits very close; some days I never catch her off for food, nor do I see the cock feeding her. He takes his turn to sit while she does feed, I notice, and "tidies up the house a bit," and "croons" to the eggs in a ridiculous fashion. Sometimes he swells himself up and "makes faces" and goes through strange gyrations to me if I look at him too much. I go as seldom as possible into the room, and as far as I can judge all is going well, and I think the eggs are fertile, as the pair mated freely, usually in the nest, I noticed.

Parrot Commences to Lay Eggs when Twenty-six Years Old.

Sir,—I remember a case being mentioned in Cage Birds of a Parrot laying eggs after being a great number of years in captivity, and recently I came across another instance in "Country Life," which may interest readers. The writer, Mr. Purdon, states: We are the possessors of a Grey Parrot, brought many years ago from the West Coast of Africa. The bird is now twenty-eight years old, and we were doubtful as to its sex until two years since, when it laid two eggs, and on June 14th repeated its performance by laying another. The eggs are white, and the same size as those of a pigeon. One egg was broken when discovered, but the others were saved, although not in the condition a collector would like them to be. The last egg was rescued when the bird had eaten about half of it! As it is rare for Parrots to lay when in captivity, especially when twenty-six, and again at twenty-eight years old, I thought the matter might possibly be of interest.

A Spring Perch Made from Cage Wire.

Sir,—I enclose a sketch of a spring perch which I have used for many years, and I find that nearly all birds like them better than those which are ridged. First get a piece of wood seven or eight inches long, allowing plenty of room between back of cage. Bore two small holes in one end to take the ends of the wire spring. The next thing necessary is a piece of ordinary cage wire, about seven inches long. Make the spiral part last by twisting the two ends round a pencil (or something similar), turning one end of the wire, then the other, until the spring is about three-eighths of an inch long. Fix the two ends into the perch, and it is then complete. The sketch shows the spring, and also the completed perch fixed in the cage front. I think the sketch will enlighten readers.

Linnets in Captivity.

Their Feeding and Treatment.

Sir,—Coming from a Latin word, the name Linnet means flax. Our brown-coated friend was thus known years ago to be very fond of flax or linseed, which he still is. I think this bird is the most popular among the working classes, being so very tame and trustful. Sixpence will generally buy a fresh-caught bird, and with a little attention it will become as tame as a Canary in a week or two. Let me just explain the difference between red and grey Linnets before I speak of their wild habits. A red Linnet is one which has acquired adult plumage; its breast feathers are tinged with blood-red colouring. A grey Linnet is one that is in baby plumage; it is without the breast colouring. The sexes are not easily distinguished by an unpractised eye, but if the spots on the breast are very plain, one can reckon the bird to be a cock. He has a bolder eye, and his appearance generally is that of the stronger sex. The hen has distinct lines on its breast, but not the least trace of "moons." In older Linnets the red-breasted ones are reckoned as cocks, the hens having no trace of the colouring. If a cock red Linnet be moulted in a cage, he loses most of his colouring, and becomes like his younger brothers. The habits of the Linnet are similar to those of the other Finches, being found on commons and waste land, especially if this be covered with weeds. In such places it feeds on the seeds of plaintain, dock, thistle, charlock, chickweed, etc., and, in fact, nearly all wild seeds. Berries are rarely eaten by this bird, it being a seedeater in the true sense of the word. It nests in thick whitethorn hedges, and rarely places the nest more than three or four feet from the ground. It is composed of roots, moss, and wool, and is lined with feathers. The eggs are usually four or five in number, and differ a trifle. They are not unlike the eggs of the Canary, having a pale blue background, and marked with red spots. When the young are hatched they are known as grey Linnets until they reach their first moult, after which they are known as red Linnets. Let us now turn to his life in confinement. First, procure a grey Linnet, because the greys are more easily steadied. Hang him in a room where people are living, and now and then just talk to him, so that he will have confidence in you. Soak some bird seed for twenty-four hours, and let him have plenty of it; also give him plaintain heads, thistle heads, and dock. The reason the seed should be soaked is that it aids its digestion, and it corresponds more to the wild seeds of nature, which are moist. Many birds are killed every year through being given hard seeds to eat, because while they may eat a lot, they get as thin as a rake, and die of starvation. Put the seed and water inside the cage until the bird steadies down a bit, or he will probably be unable to find them. Gradually change the soaked seed to hard seed, and hang his pots outside. Give him plenty of cracked old hemp, which, if the bird has any song in him, will soon bring it out. A good stock food may be made as follows: Canary, 3 parts, teazel 2 parts, rape 1 part, charlock 1 part, linseed 1 part, and about 1 part of hemp, during the moult. About once a week give him a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Two ozs. gold of pleasure, niger, seasame, and thistle seeds, and 1 oz. mustard, dandelion, maw, cornflower, and lettuce seeds. A sprig of groundsel, watercress, or seeding chickweed should be given every day; also a few stalks of plaintain occasionally, all which should be in a ripe condition. Supply him with a bath on bright days once a week, and well cover the cage bottom with sand. Following this treatment your bird will not take much harm, and no bird shows such delight on seeing its master as our brown-coated friend. The song of the Linnet is made up of a number of notes, and resembles a twittering more than a song. Whereas the Canary pours forth its song continuously, the notes of a Linnet are jolted out, as it were.

Late Singing of the Nightingale.

Sir,—I was much interested in a note I read recently in my weekly paper concerning the lateness at which the Nightingale has been heard singing this year down in Herefordshire. The writer, "Ormis," says: "Near the place in Herefordshire where I spent the week-end, the Nightingales were singing loudly and beautifully on the nights of July 1st and 2nd. They were not heard by one individual only, but by a considerable party, who were attracted to the lawn by their singing. Usually the birds begin to sing late in April, and continue about six weeks in song. They have very much over-passed that period this year, and it would almost appear as though they were producing two broods instead of one." I wonder if the last remark of this correspondent can be accurate?

Can Passengers Take Birds Out to Australia?

Sir,—I shall feel obliged if some reader of your valuable paper can give me a little information on the following: An old exhibitor of Norwich and Lizards, in a few weeks I am going out with my family to Australia. I have two English house-moulted Goldfinches which I keep for a hobby. Now, should I be allowed by the shipping company to take them out with me in my cabin? Of course, their room would not mean much, if, that is, a passenger is allowed to take birds out with him. About what freightage would the shipping companies charge?

E. Williams.

[We know of cases where passengers have taken out birds to Australia, but whether there was any charge made by the shipping company we cannot say, nor whether permission had specially to be obtained. Our correspondent should enquire of the agent from whom he intends to take his tickets. Perhaps some of our readers can also give him a hint or two.—Editor.]

Breeding Goldfinches in Aviaries.

Sir,—On reading my Cage Birds last week I was interested in Mr. Bowerman's account of his Goldfinches nesting in a cage. I have been watching for his results, as I read his note in Cage Birds on July 1. I am sorry he did not have better luck. The results may be better next time. Perhaps the following may be of interest to some readers of Cage Birds. I have been trying to breed Goldfinches this season in an outdoor aviary. I first tried for Hybrids and Mules, but as the two cock Goldfinches did not seem to care to mate with any of the Finches or Canaries, I turned in two hen Goldfinches, and they both paired up and built their nests in small nest-boxes. No. 1 pair laid one shell-less egg, and No. 2 pair one egg which was clear. On the second round they each laid five eggs, all in their nests, and both hens sat quite as good as any Canary to all appearances, with the result that No. 1 pair's eggs were fertile, the chicks being dead in shell. I cannot account for this unless by the extra hot weather. No. 2 pair's eggs were all clear. These birds were twice house-moulted, and very tame. In the same aviary I have managed to breed two Linnet-Canary Mules and two Hybrids. The birds are all flying together, and were left to mate as they chose. But the Goldfinch being a late breeder, if they go to nest for the third time this year and hatch out any young, I am doubtful if they will rear them successfully. I have bred Greenfinches in this way, and they have reared their young till they could fly, and then would not feed them any more. I have one hen Greenfinch now rearing her young Redpoll-Greenfinch Hybrid. I was forced to leave her with the eggs, not having a hen Canary ready. The Hybrid is about a week old, and doing well.

A SCOTTISH SENSATION.

Investigation into Alleged Malpractice of prominent Judge and Exhibitor.

An Unexpected Development.

The sensational allegations made by a Glasgow fancier, Mr. D. Graham, against a prominent exhibitor and judge, Mr. A. McFarlane, were dealt with at the last meeting of the City of Glasgow O.A., and resulted in both parties being permanently suspended from membership of the Association. The charge was one of lending Norwich Plainheads for the purpose of being shown under, and adjudicated upon by, their owner. The case took an unexpected turn, inasmuch as both accused and accuser sent in resignations of membership, which were read at the meeting. We have been favoured with two reports, and as they differ in stylo, we publish them both.

An extraordinary general meeting of the City of Glasgow O.A. was held in the Reception Room of the City Hall, on July 29. The esteemed president, Mr. D. Black, was in the chair, supported by Mr. McDonald, the energetic secretary. Members filed in until every available space was occupied; many had to stand throughout the prolonged proceedings. The Secretary read the minutes of the meeting of May 20, wherein it was recorded that Mr. Duncan Graham had stated at the said meeting that Mr. Alexander McFarlane, a well-known fancier, breeder, exhibitor, and judge of Norwich Canaries, gave him the loan of a bird, which was shown by him (Mr. Graham) at the October show of the City of Glasgow O.A., at which the owner, Mr. McFarlane, was acting as judge, and that he (Mr. McFarlane) did adjudicate upon the particular class in which it was staged. At the May meeting Mr. Jarvie corroborated Mr. Graham's statement.

Mr. Black had not an easy task to keep the meeting in order. The adoption of the minutes was proposed and seconded, but some members urged for the whole of the business of the May meeting being rescinded, on the ground that the proceedings were irregular and illegal. The chair was firm for the passing of the minute as a correct record of what transpired. It was acknowledged a faithful narrative, and was adopted.

The Chairman asked the members if they would be satisfied with the finding of the Committee who had the fanciers before them to give evidence at their meeting. But there was an emphatic call to hear the statements made by those who gave evidence. From these it was held that an irregularity had been committed, and the Committee had reported accordingly.

At this stage the Chairman rose with two letters, which he read, from Mr. McFarlane and Mr. Graham resigning their membership of the City of Glasgow O.A. For a few minutes the members seemed "spell-bound," but, recovering, indicated in no uncertain voice that the case would not be allowed to pass with a simple resignation. It was thoroughly dramatic, and cleared up the wonder as to the two fanciers in question not putting in an appearance at this meeting. After a heated discussion it was put forward that their resignations be not accepted, and that the said Messrs. McFarlane and Graham be expelled from all participation in the Association for either two years, or for five years, or for life. On the vote being taken, they (Messrs. Graham and McFarlane) were expelled the Association for life.

The Chairman afterwards asked what was to be done with four gentlemen who had seemed to know more or less about the goings-on? Unparliamentary language was indulged in, and several members did not seem to have any regard for each other for a time, but completely lost their self-control. It was urged, in view of the searching enquiry which had been held and the decisive course adopted as to the two principals, that the matter be allowed to drop. It was, on the other hand, urged that the matter be further investigated, with the object of reaching others who might be involved. Ultimately it was decided to allow the matter to drop.

The members interested were not satisfied with the election of judges, and here a pleasing incident occurred. One gentleman did not seem to be known to all the members, and on this being hinted at, he stated that if there was any objection to him he would withdraw. His open, frank manner won for him the admiration of the meeting, and he was not only re-elected as a judge, but was complimented by the Chairman upon the result. Mr. Cant then thanked the members for the honour conferred upon him.

The question of dealers being allowed to take part in the Association was reconsidered, and it was unanimously decided to withdraw the embargo passed at the May meeting against the Glasgow bird dealers.

Not since 1882 has anything like this upheaval occurred in the Association. Mr. Black acquitted himself with credit in the chair, and earned the golden opinions of every member, and now that the air has been cleared, it is to be hoped that the Society will prosper.—The Chairman was deservedly accorded a very hearty vote of thanks.

The Chairman opened the meeting by inviting those wishing to do so to join as members, and there was a good response, many being enrolled. When the Chairman asked whether any questions arose bearing on the minutes, Mr. T. Todd asked if he was in order in moving a discussion on the finding of the Special Committee re Messrs. Graham and McFarlane. The Chairman advised Mr. Todd to frame his remarks into a motion, which he did as follows:—That Messrs. Graham and Alex. McFarlane be expelled from the Society for all time (i.e., life). Mr. Sloan seconded. Mr. Shearer moved an amendment that they be suspended for a period of five years. Another amendment was moved by Mr. Higgins that they be suspended for two years. Mr. Todd's motion that they be suspended for all time was carried by 28 votes to 25. The President here remarked that there were some members aware of what had been going on, and he considered it was their duty to have acquainted the Society, and so enabled them to have taken immediate steps, especially in so far as it related to the prize-money paid out. At this point a rather heated discussion took place between Mr. Adam and Mr. Jarvie, which contained much of the personal element, but through the tact of the Chairman it was not allowed to proceed. Mr. Miller said Mr. Jarvie, being aware of facts affecting the welfare of the Society, did wrong in not disclosing to the Society the information he possessed. A member here moved that the discussion should now cease, but not finding a seconder, the discussion was allowed to proceed.

It was proposed by Mr. Higgins that a special committee be appointed to investigate and report on the conduct of four members—Messrs. Marlin, Jarvie, Roulstone, and Campbell—in connection with the alleged withholding of information in their possession. Mr. Miller seconded. Mr. Phillips moved an amendment that, considering the evidence brought forward, it was not sufficient to even censure these four members. This was seconded by Mr. Rennie. There voted for Mr. Phillips's amendment 21; and for Mr. Higgins's motion, 9.

A motion by Mr. Barron that the proceedings of the last meeting be rescinded, was carried. The Chairman pointed out that then the judges for the different classes had been appointed for their next show, and if through Mr. Barron's motion it would be necessary to appoint new judges, those who were on the former list, but were not appointed on the present occasion, would require to be paid. He wished the meeting to clearly understand this. Several names were proposed and seconded and put to the vote, when it was found that the list of judges stood precisely as before, there being no alteration. Mr. Jarvie gave notice of his resignation as a member. A number of irrelevant matters were discussed.

WHAT IT DOES ASPIRE TO ACCOMPLISH

Notes by the Secretary.

I have had during the week the pleasure of a visit from a prominent North-country fancier, and in the course of our conversation it transpired that fanciers in the North have had such experience of Leagues, Unions, Federations, and various other combines, that they are chary of the very name of League as meaning something which is likely to interfere with the liberty of the individual fancier. I thought it had been made quite clear that Cage Birds League does not in any way aspire or intend to be a governing or controlling body, and that it cannot conflict with any existing club or society.

The Danger; and the Safe-guard.

What it does aspire to do is to act as a League of Defence and Protection against the misdirected efforts of those who are out to put an end to cage-bird keeping once and for all, efforts which, backed up as they are by practically unlimited capital, may at any time result in disaster. The danger, in fact, is a certainty, unless bird-keepers show that they will brook no interference, and this can only be shown by banding themselves into one enormous body. This body, Cage Birds League, is now in existence, and it remains for every individual fancier to enter his name upon its roll of membership. The subscription is a mere nothing, amounting as it does to less than a farthing a week. My ideal is a membership of 50,000, and I shall not rest until I have attained it. If you, my friend, who may read these lines will send on your own individual application for membership, my ideal will be reached immediately.

"Aims and Objects" Ready.

Neat circulars setting forth in a concise form the aims and objects of Cage Birds League are now ready. I have sent out several thousands to those who had applied for them, and should be glad to hear from anyone who may have been accidentally overlooked. Copies will be sent post free to any who would like to have them for reference or distribution among their friends.

Branch Hon-Secretaries.

During the past week I have written to the Hon. Secretaries of Cage Bird Societies throughout the Kingdom inviting them to accept office as Local Honorary Secretaries to Cage Birds League, and I am pleased to announce that in the day or two which has elapsed I have already received letters from the undermentioned gentlemen accepting the office. I have no doubt that the list will be materially added to in the near future. In the meantime, intending members residing in the places mentioned may obtain particulars of the aims and objects of the League from those in the list as below, and may make their applications for membership through the same source. I need not say that Cage Birds League is much indebted to these gentlemen for so kindly agreeing to give their valuable services to the ends we have in view.

Badges for Over-seas Fanciers.

Mr. Houldsworth, Secretary of Dalton and District C.B.A., in introducing some new members, applies for extra Badges in the following terms: "The extra Badges are intended for fanciers in South and West Africa, and will be a means of introducing the movement out there." Letters of this kind show the great interest which is being taken in the League by its members, and are a guarantee of its success. I think it will not be long before our opponents will be astonished at the front we shall be able to present against their attacks on our hobby.

"The Humanitarian" for the current month has a column devoted to an appreciation of the pamphlet "The Other Side of the Bars." In this it says "the pamphlet has been received with a storm of abuse from 'the trade' and its organs Cage Birds," etc. It is "delighted to see that the cagemen are in such a flutter," and takes it "as a compliment that a League has been formed to oppose us." They are welcome to the compliment, and may be assured that we shall continue to oppose them in their interference with our hobby. The strength already attained by Cage Birds League in the first four months of its existence, and in the off season, is a satisfactory augury of what it will become in the immediate future, and the so-called Humanitarians may well think more than once before persisting in their unwarranted meddling with the pursuits of those who are nothing behind them in their love of birds and animals.

Sir,—Received badge and book safe, and am well pleased with them. I am sure anyone seeing this badge will surely have one, it is so pretty. Wishing you every success with C.B.L.

The Alleged Faking of Exhibition Linnets.

Sir,—I am interested in the discussion concerning the faking of Linnets which ensued after Mr. Marley's recent lecture, as I happen to be the "London judge" referred to by Mr. Mortlock (vide page 62 of this week's issue). The Linnet of which he spoke, however, was not the Palace winner of two shows ago, but I fancy, the winner of three shows back (1909). I am not sure, of course, whether Mr. Marley's report gives an accurate version of Mr. Mortlock's remarks. I have known Mr. Mortlock for a number of years, and have always found him "one of the best"—a straightforward, thoroughly practical fancier—the last person to do an injustice to anyone. The remarks of his (or Mr. Marley's version of them) here referred to, however, I venture to thing are unfair to myself, conveying, as they do, the impression that I awarded first prize at the Palace to a Linnet which was a plain and unmistakable example of the "art" of the faker—"faked right and left." Well, the latter remark I find rather crushing, seeing that I have always taken a keen interest in "faking" and methods of detecting it. In the case of this bird, however, I seem to have erred in good company, for its owner claimed, I remember, that it had never been beaten (I think it once stood second), and it was awarded first at the great Scottish National Show, amongst other noted fixtures. It is surely curious that such a "wrong 'un" (?) should put up such a record and never get bowled over. I believe Mr. Mortlock was my steward at the 1909 Palace Show—I have had his able assistance on a number of occasions—and, if so, the facts must be well known to him. They are: that this Linnet attracted my attention at once, and was put at the head of the class; that he was a splendid bird at all points, and excelled in soundness of colour and in polish on the feather; that his solidity of colour notably attracted me (though, mind, it was not a really suspicious or "mahogany" tone of colour), and so I tested him by two methods, one or other of which would have removed any external colouring which was capable of being removed; that not the faintest trace of external colouring was revealed. So I gave this Linnet first prize and the special for best bird in my section. Would it have been consistent with Mr. Mortlock's idea of justice that I should have thrown out this bird when unable to prove anything against it? Is it enough to merely say: "This bird is so good, it cannot be genuine?" Not to my manner of thinking, anyway. Several fanciers (friends of mine) said they thought the bird had been faked. Perhaps it had; perhaps it hadn't. I invited them to demonstrate it; but no one got beyond the talking stage. And, as I failed myself, I gave the bird what I considered its just dues. I can recall several super-excellent Bullfinches and Goldfinches which stood ahead so clearly that suspicion was at once loosed against them. The point that I next year gave the same bird (or said to be the same) not even a card when exhibited by another owner, is not worthy of mention. I could name several exhibitors to-day who could claim a Palace winner and in a few weeks' time reduce it to such a state that it would not win at even a local show. Mr. Marley, of course, is so used to developing birds into champions that it is excusable this point should have escaped him. I have not forgotten that the owner of this Linnet told Mr. Mortlock (and Mr. Mortlock told me) that he could put the bird down in the same excellent form the following year—Mr. Mortlock, I remember, took this as being direct evidence of faking. But was it?

All About the Norwich Plainhead.

By J. A. T. WOODALL (Sheffield).

Respecting feeding, I do not give the birds any luxuries. Their staple food is the best Spanish canary seed (kept clean and sweet), fresh water daily, and once or twice a week a little mixed seed. Sometimes I miss the mixed seed, and give them a little egg food for a change. This mode of feeding I continue up to about the second week in February.

We now begin to think about the breeding season and building our castles in the air, which to our sorrow all fall with a terrible crash. I don't think the fancier has yet been born who has had all his hopes realised in connection with Canary breeding.

After the winter treatment I have explained our birds should be in the best of health, so that a little extra feeding will soon get them into breeding condition. The method I adopt to attain this and have always found very successful is, as soon as we commence the third week in February I commence giving egg food to both cocks and hens every other day for a fortnight; on the alternate days I give them mixed seed. I continue this diet to the beginning of March, when I can supply the egg food every day. I also give them a good supply of green food. Dandelion is preferred, but if I cannot get it I am compelled to resort to watercress. Continue the green food up to the laying of the last egg, and commence giving again when the young are about three days old.

Ready to Pair Up.

You will notice that some birds appear to come into breeding condition much sooner than others; you must keep your eye on them, and if you notice some are coming on too quickly, miss giving them the extra food for a day or two so as to keep them back, as it is always advisable to have your birds all go to nest at the same time.

I take it we are now ready for pairing up, but be careful and do not put them together too early. We at times have very nice weather about the middle of March, but the nights are very keen and cold, and sometimes the keen east winds are likely to give you practically a clear round of eggs. This means a loss of stamina to your stock without any results. I always reckon to put my birds together on the last Sunday in March. The reason I select the Sunday is because I have the whole day to do it in. It is a big job to do systematically, and requires a lot of study and thought.

Pairing up is one of the most important things in connection with your birds, and one that requires a great deal of study, that is, to do it properly. We have already set aside the stock which we intended using for breeding, so that we must put these birds together to produce the best possible offspring. Of course, we all know the general routine is to pair buff to yellow, and yellow to buff. The principle I work upon is as follows: I take all my yellow cocks and put them in show cages. I look them well over, and see in what particular point each bird is strong, and in what points it is weak. I have a rough idea what the birds are. I then take all my buff hens, place them in show cages, and notice their strong and weak points. Then I pair accordingly. For instance, if a hen is extra wide in skull I should put her with a rather narrow headed bird, or an extra short bird I should put with one that is on the long side. Thus I take particular care that whatever is a weak point in either bird is made up for in its partner by strength in that point. If you get two weak points alike in both birds you stand a poor chance of having anything different in their offspring. Of course, the same mode of procedure applies to buff cocks and yellow hens.

Items Needing Attention.

Another very important thing in connection with putting your birds together is to examine their claws. Cut the claws of both cocks and hens, as with sharp claws the birds are liable to prick the eggs when getting on and off the nest, which would naturally cause the eggs to be unfertile.

Another thing which I always do is to cut the loose fluffy feathers around the vent of both cock and hen, as abundance of feather on that part of the bird has been known to be the cause of clear eggs.

Our birds having been together a few days are now showing signs of settling down. Of course, this has not been achieved without the usual differences and quarrels, but as these have now all been amicably settled you will find them beginning to think about domestic duties, and you must prepare for them what they cannot do themselves. Continue feeding them with egg food and mixed seed, and dandelion, giving the hens an extra supply of inga seed, as this has been proved to be a good preventative of egg binding.

It is now time you were putting your nests in the cages; at the same time you should give your birds a supply of moss to play with. I say "to play with" because you will find they will keep building and rebuilding nests until they really settle down in earnest to carry out their domestic duties. Once they commence this, your troubles begin, and unfortunately they are not always "little ones." If they were, we could do with it.

Egg-binding and Its Treatment.

When your birds have built, and are ready for laying, you must keep your eye on the hen, and be prepared in case of egg-binding to give her instant relief if possible, as the sooner you take this matter in hand the better chance you have of getting your hen round. Fortunately for me I have not had much trouble as regards egg-binding. As soon as you notice a bird looking "thick," take her out and examine her. If you find she is egg-bound, give her a drop or two of castor-oil in her beak; oil her vent well with a camel-hair brush, and put her back in the cage. You will then almost invariably find she will get rid of the obstruction. If she does not you must resort to other means. Again, oil the vent well with a camel-hair brush; then get a jug of boiling water. Place a piece of white muslin or some other fine fabric over the top, hold the hen over, and you will find that by this means she will get relief.

I should advise you too to give this particular hen a rest. If she lays the remainder of her eggs, you might place them under some other hen, but on no account let the one you have had the trouble with carry out the duties of incubation.

Presuming that the remainder of your birds are going on alright you will now be having eggs. You will, of course, take the eggs away as laid and replace on the evening when the third egg is laid. If you find the cock does not trouble the hen in any way, by all means let him remain, as he will assist her in carrying out the duties of feeding the young chicks; but if he is at all troublesome you must remove him at once. On the evening of the 14th day of incubation you must replace egg food in the cage, as you can expect your young chicks to be hatched the following morning.

I should not advise you to be too curious; don't disturb the hen in any way. You can have your wishes gratified by placing your ear to the cage. If any are hatched you will hear them; but remain in ignorance of the number until you find the hen is off feeding.

You must now be very careful as to your methods. In the first instance you must have egg-pots, egg-mill, etc., scrupulously clean. I should suggest washing them every day, as by so doing you avoid having any sour egg or bread left in the mill or pots, which contaminates your fresh egg-food. Another very important thing is to have all old egg-food that may have been thrown to the bottom of the cage scraped out daily; this applies more especially when the young get out of the nest, as they are always picking about the bottom of the cage, and sour food may set up some disease which you cannot cope with, and which will eventually end in their loss.

When Young Are Three Weeks Old.

When your young birds are getting about three weeks old you will have to watch them very keenly. The parent birds are now preparing to go to nest again, and they very often take a fancy to the feathers from their previous offspring, in preference to the moss and other material you give them for constructing their next nest. As soon as you think they are able to pick a little for themselves, place them in a nursery cage, on the front. Don't wait to do it at night, or next day, or you may find when you go to your birds that they are stripped of practically every feather. You had better take them away a day too soon than a day too late. You will find that the old birds will always feed them through the wires.

As soon as they are able to pick for themselves take them away and place them in separate cages, giving them the usual canary seed. They will get to pick this in time. Also give a good supply of egg-food, crushed hemp and soaked rape, but no green food, as this may set up inflammation.

It will perhaps be as well if I give you an idea how I mix my egg-food, as I have previously pointed out that it must be fresh, and not allowed to get sour. If it does go sour throw it away. Whatever number of eggs I require I boil together; for illustration we will say two. I boil them in a morning first thing. I grind one only with the quantity of bread I consider necessary. This I give them first thing and at dinner time. The second egg I grind at teatime and mix as the former. This I give them then, and the remainder is used for filling their egg-pots just before dark so that they always have a good supply of fresh egg-food to go at as soon as it is daylight. Of course, whatever may be left in the pots of the previous mixture I throw away, as it is sure to be tainted.

Some British Finches.

By A. J. A. MARLEY (Leyton).

How is that dark nutty brown colour in Linnets obtained; does it not result from colour feeding?—To a limited extent it does, but you must have a sound natural colour first to work upon. But the best way to get the colour is to feed as near to nature as possible; and a good supply of shepherd's purse, hardheads, plantain, mustard seed, and charlock given to a bird of sound colour during the moult, would be equal to a ton of colour food.

Mr. Lacey: It is a well-known fact, I believe, that in the case of some of the most beautiful Finches the colour is not inside, but outside?—I have read an article recently by a well-known fancier on staining, and I am afraid that what I read led me to think that if these pastmasters of this art would only patronise a few of the London shows, instead of confining their visits to the shows of the North and Midlands, there would be a few more disqualifications. There is certainly little or no faking or staining down South.

Mr. Mortlock: Two years ago there was one at the Crystal Palace. A London judge officiated. The bird was alleged to be faked right and left, but was awarded a 1st prize. The next year he got nothing—the colour was quite obliterated.*

[*A letter on this point, from Mr. G. E. Weston, will be found among the correspondence this week. —Editor.]

Mr. Marley: I admit that the Northern and Scotch Linnets shown are of a much deeper colour than the Southern birds; possibly it may all depend on the feed of the county in which they are caught.

Mr. Neighbour: How would you distinguish the sex in Greypates?—It is a very knotty problem. I purchased about sixty Goldies last season, and among these about twenty Greys; and I had only one that turned out "a Suffragette." I have always gone for the largest and boldest birds—those which show plenty of colour, and which have jet black wing butts; and although some of my best Finches this season are Greys, I would much prefer waiting till well into October, as then the blaze is well shown. I really don't believe in purchasing Greypates too early. I have seen scores in the markets during the first week in September—poor little creatures, just hopped out of the nest, stuffed up in tiny back cages and quite unable to crack a seed for themselves, there to stop until death releases them. The best time to buy Goldies is between the months of October and January.

Mr. Harper: Is a Cheveral or Pea-throat Goldfinch within the category of a show bird?—Certainly not. I distinctly stated in my lecture on the Goldie: "A large and well expanded blaze, minus any breaks or gutterings." A Cheveral or a Pea-throat is a bird having a broken blaze, and such birds would "go to blazes" if I were adjudicating at any decent show. I look on them as "freak birds."

Mr. Neighbour: Do you think it would improve the colour of a Linnet to make him bathe in cold tea?—You shock me! If you are going to revert to faking or staining, why not supply him with a bath of cochineal or furniture polish?

Mr. Copeland: It seems to me Goldfinches lose their tannings as they grow old.—I beg to disagree. Providing a bird is methodically kept in proper condition, he will year by year improve in this respect, and it is not my experience that a bird deteriorates.——Does the county from which the bird comes make any difference?—Certainly; there are better-coloured Goldfinches in one county than in another; and this better colour is due undoubtedly to the feed they obtain and also where they feed.

Mr. Lathleiff: Do we get our best Goldfinches from Worcestershire?—No; the best for show purposes come from Wales and from Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Lacey: Many Siberian Goldfinches were let loose in Wales; would the resulting breed be Britishers?—Undoubtedly so, British-bred.

Mr. Sweetman: There is a great secret in the matter of the colour-feeding of Goldfinches. There is a tendency to defer colour-feeding the Goldie until he has grown his wing feathers.—Mr. Marley: Personally, I have no experience in that direction. I fail to see how a bird is going to improve in colour after it is fully moulted, except in proportion as it comes up in breeding condition. The idea in colour-feeding is to charge the bird's system with the colouring pigments and to impregnate the blood; and this can only be done at least a fortnight before the bird casts a feather, so what is the use of waiting till the Goldie has three-parts moulted?

Mr. Hammond: Do you give the birds any insectivorous food?—Yes; Hawfinches, Chaffies, Brambles, and all Buntings, etc. I am sorry I omitted this information in my lecture. I also mix a small portion of colour food with it during the moult; they pick it over readily.

At the conclusion of the questioning the Chairman said: I feel it my duty to propose a vote of thanks to Mr. Marley, not only for his lecture, but also for the exceptionally good way in which he has answered the questions. I trust you will give him that hearty vote of thanks which he deserves for the great amount of time, expense, and trouble he has gone to on our behalf.

Mr. Sweetman, in seconding the proposal, said that he felt certain all must have derived much knowledge and benefit from the lecture.

A unanimous vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Marley, who briefly replied, thanking those present for their kind remarks and saying that he felt proud to have had the honour of such a splendid muster of members and friends. He concluded by saying: The North London Society was the first association I joined, and I look up to it with respect. I have always found my brother members a fine lot of "sports." I sincerely hope my recent achievements will not discourage the members, or in any way affect the entries at the shows, and to endeavour to put myself on a more level footing with you I have decided to enter at the Young Stock Show practically a team of field-moulted birds.

Penal Servitude for Fraud.

William Haynes, alias Thomas Sinclair, labourer, aged 29, was charged at the Liverpool Sessions on July 31st with obtaining by false pretences a piano from John Goudge, of London, also other goods, including birds, as detailed in our last issue.

Mr. Wooll, who prosecuted, said Mr. Goudge inserted an advertisement in a London paper offering for sale a £65 piano for twenty guineas. The prisoner wrote negotiating for the purchase, and enclosed a card representing himself as a dealer in scrap rubber living at 24, Haigh Street, Everton. The piano was sent to the prisoner, who sold it to a broker for £3 10s. and 10s. worth of furniture. The prosecutor had not been paid.

Haynes was found guilty, and a long string of previous convictions were read out against him.—He pleaded guilty to three other charges of obtaining, by false pretences, a banjo, a number of Canaries, and a gramophone.—He was sentenced to three years' penal servitude on each charge, the terms to run concurrently.

Mr. J. H. Jowett (Bradford), one of the parties defrauded, writes: The man Haynes, who had fraudulently obtained Canaries, etc., from advertisers, was given three years, and also five years' police supervision. The detective who has had the matter in hand from the first (Detective Range) very cleverly performed his duties, and was most obliging to myself and all the witnesses. Great credit is due to Detective Range. It was brought to light that the prisoner, Haynes, had previously served time for very serious charges in other counties.

Shakespeare and the Nightingale.

The immortal Shakespeare, of course, very observant, but he was a little bit wide of the mark in his lines on the Nightingale:—

"The Nightingale, if he should sing by day,
When every Goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the Wren."

WOMBWELL AND DIST. B.F.A.

Lecture on the Moulting and Colour-feeding of Canaries.

At the usual meeting, held July 29th, the members were favoured with a paper written by Mr. A. H. Waters (Wombwell) on the moulting and colour-feeding of the canary. Owing to business pressure Mr. Waters was unable to attend, and the paper was read by the Secretary. At the close a hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Waters, which terminated an instructive and enjoyable evening. The paper read as follows:—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: Having been invited by you to give a paper on moulting and colour feeding, I will endeavour to give you my experience as briefly and as clearly as possible. As regards moulting, almost all healthy young birds commence moulting when 7 or 8 weeks old, and should be got on colour feed when 7 weeks old, and, of course, be kept on a daily supply until the moult is completed. As regards old birds that will be required for exhibition, these should be put on colour food about the middle of July, and should not be allowed to rear any late nests of young, as nothing takes more out of the birds than feeding youngsters. My experience is that if allowed to rear any late nests of young they nearly always come out of the moult a very poor colour.

Now, to moult old birds successfully I generally find it necessary to limit the supply of canary seed, and in some cases to take seed boxes away several hours each day until the birds have eaten sufficient colour feed to bring them out a good sound colour. I also cover my cages, and I find the best way to do this where possible is to have cages in stacks in rows; then fasten a cord to the walls at either end of the room, and hang some old sheets or curtains a few inches off the cages; this keeps the birds warm, and obviates draughts; it also keeps them clean and keeps the strong light off them. The last mentioned is very necessary when good colour is required, for there is no doubt that a strong light bleaches the colour out of the birds if they are not protected from it during the moult.

I make my colour feed both dry and in a paste, and find very little difference in the results as far as colour is concerned, but I prefer the paste, as it is less trouble to make than the dry. In either case to one hard boiled egg I put a slice of bread an inch or more thick, about 6 or 8 teaspoonsful of colour feed, two or three teaspoonsful of sugar, and a teaspoonful of maw seed. These I well mix together until it is all one good colour. Of course, if using it dry I grind the bread, and mix, and if using in the paste form I soak the bread in cold water, squeeze the water out and beat up together until it is made up into a nice soft paste. This I do by squeezing it through my hands until it is mixed as I require it. But it can easily be made in a rather deep dish and beaten together by a fork, and made into a paste by a table knife. When made, supply each bird with a small pat (about a teaspoonful), and if using it dry a teaspoonful is quite sufficient.

With regard to the use of drugs, etc., during the moult the only thing I use is sulphate of iron crystal to help to fix the colour. This I commence using (giving a crystal about the size of a hemp seed in the drinking water about three days in each week), when the birds are about three parts through the moult, and I continue it until they are clean moulted. For several weeks after I give it about twice a week.

If a bird gets stuck in the moult I give it plenty of mixed seed made up of equal parts hemp, German rape and linseed, and a little maw seed. I also give plenty of ripe Shepherd's purse. Birds that get stuck in moult are generally very poor in colour, and of not much use for exhibition.

When all my birds are nearing the end of the moult I give them some best linseed (about one part linseed to three parts canary seed mixed together). I keep them on this until they are in good condition again. I believe the linseed helps to get a good sheen on the feather, and brings them into show condition. Best linseed meal (sifted to take out the husks) can be given in the colour food, about two teaspoonsful to one egg, etc., instead of the linseed; it will bring birds out of the moult with a beautiful sheen on the feather. But care must be taken to see that it is fresh and not rancid. This can be given from the commencement of the moult and continued until finished.—J. Hudson, Sec.

GATESHEAD AND DIST. C.B.S.

Table show held July 20 for young birds. We had a fairly good turn up of youngsters—not as many as we would have liked to see. Entries totalled 60. What was lacking in numbers, however, was made up for in quality. Some very nice birds were staged by our novice members. One in particular a very nice Buff Border pressed very hard for the diploma for best bird in show, presented by Mr. Taylor, the foreigner only beating him by a small margin. Mr. T. C. Crawhall judged the Canaries, Mr. J. Shepherd the British, and Mr. T. Taylor the foreign. Their awards seemed to meet with the approval of all. A vote of thanks was given the judges and officials, proposed by Mr. R. W. Smith, and seconded by Mr. J. Mackenzie.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

Second Y.B. Show held July 22nd, All Saints' Parochial Hall, Battersea Park, a record young bird show for the club being the result. We believe ours was the largest show of Borders held in London —20 in the champion and 15 in the novice classes, all of a very good quality. Mr. Luff secured highest honours in the champion Norwich, and the two old opponents, Messrs. Tebbs and King, divided the spoils in the Yorkies, special going to Mr. King. Mr. Moore secured special for champion Border (a very close thing) against Mrs. Thynne. In the novice section Mr. MacMillan won special for Norwich, and Mr. Lloyd for Yorkshires. Mrs. Denham won special in the Borders, and Mr. Clements in the British section. Mr. Shakespeare judged, and gave the greatest satisfaction.—G. Harwood, Hon. Sec.

(From the catalogue we note that the chief prize-winners were Mrs. Thynne, Mrs. Denham and Messrs. Luff, Tebbs, King, Moore, MacMillan, Lloyd, Gollop, and Clements.—Editor.)

I not only guarantee my nets to be as represented, but ask you to have them on approval, and to smash them up or destroy them in any way if you find they are not better value at less cost than can be obtained elsewhere. UNDENIABLE BARGAINS

1911 NORWICH COCKS.—Singing, and will make champions, 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6 each; now, to prove this, I offer to give six months' approval with these birds—i.e., to refund money in full or exchange same for a cock on full song. All other birds usual approval terms, as follows: 3/9, 4/3, 4/6, and 5/6 upwards. Hens, 2/-, 2/6, and 3/6 each. Pairs, 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, all hearing my stamp as a guarantee of sex, and any bird proving not to be a cock bearing such stamp is exchanged, the lapse of time being no object. Hence, here is a security never offered by anyone else, and a safeguard against the now well-known "hen trick"—i.e., the tempting priced, so-called singing cocks, whether named Norwich, Hartz Rollers, or Yorkshires, it is all the same.

YORKSHIRES.—Cocks, 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6, 15/-, 20/-, 30/- Pairs 7/6, 8/6, 9/6, 10/6, 12/6. Hens, 2/6, 3/6, 4/6. Travelling Cages, 3d. extra.

ROYSTON.

Show held in connection with the Horticultural Society's Exhibition on Whit-Monday. The entry was about the best the society has had, and considering the time of year, and the counter-attraction of the Cambridge show on the same day, was really a nice display. Everything was well arranged, and the management of the show reflected the highest credit upon the hon. live stock sec. (Mr. H. V. Chamberlain); while Mrs. Atlee, a very old fancier, carried out the duties of cage bird steward in an attentive and delightfully kind and courteous manner. To this section of the show fell the special prize for best exhibit in the whole of the live stock department, a splendid Australian Magpie, or Piping Crow, shown by Mr. E. Day, securing the honour. We understand that this bird has secured the same honour before at Royston. This year the bird was in the most magnificent plumage, and was the chief attraction. Mrs. Ballard won the silver spoon with a very neat and stylish Yorkshire; so that a good share of the chief specials fell to the cage bird department. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged.

NOR.: 1, Peddar, typical, soft-feathered buff, in nice condition, neat head, good wing carriage; 2, Allington, beautiful col., grand quality, vgtd. yell., needs just a little more substance to make a top sawyer; 3, Pedder, another buff, loses only in substance, neat, good quality; vhc, sp., Handscombe, yell., seen its best days, but has been a nice one; c, Handscombe; c, Humphris. YORKS.: 1, spl., 2, 3, Mrs. Ballard, nice team of blood Yorkies; vhc, hc, c, Smart, very fair in style and quality. GOLDIE: 1 Allington, very nice face, fine bar and neat buttons, just going off in lustre; 2, Ainger, not quite so good on points or feather, but nice; 3, Muncey, neat, good bars, vhc, Mrs. Hagger. GREENIE: 1, Mrs. Ballard, sound col., close as wax, in tip-top feather; 2, Reynolds, stout and large, but dull and darker in col.; 3, Chapman, too small be side the winners. BRIT. A.O.S.: 1, Peddar, stout, well marked Linnet, like most, showing signs of moult; 2, Mrs. Ballard, topping Brambling when in full pomp; 3, Neades, pretty little Siskin, good cap and bib; vhc, Slater. FOR.: 1, spl, best in show, E. Day, Australian Piping Crow, already referred to; 2, Offord, shown in beautiful plumage and lustrous col.; 3, Hon. Constance Agar-Robartes, lustrous and beautifully steady Mynah; vhc, Mrs. Ellen E. Day. LOCAL COTTAGERS' CAN.: 1, 2, Smart, Yorks., fair type and quality; 3, Ashby, Nor., might have been better shown; vhc, Neades; hc, Atlee; c, Muncey. BRIT. OR MULES: 1, 2, Muncey, Goldie-Canary Mules of the darker persuasion, Jonques, nice faces; 3, Barnard, dark Linnet-Canary; vhc, Read; hc, Neades.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects. Harmless to everything.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.S.

First Y.B. show, held Lesser Public Hall, Alexandria, 5th August, when some grand specimens were staged. A few classes for British were added, and the birds here made a grand show. The Society is to be congratulated on this, its initial, effort. The officials are fanciers of the proper stamp. The membership is over sixty, mostly "young bloods." The Public Hall is most suitable for a cage bird show. The exhibition was well supported by the locals, and the coffers of the Society should be greatly augmented. Mr. A. H. McLean (late of Glasgow) makes an ideal secretary and the arrangements passed off merrily. Mr. Bell (Dumbarton) placed the cards in Scots Fancy classes, while Mr. J. H. Adam (Glasgow) handled the remainder. Their awards were well received.

GWENNAP F.A.

A most successful show was held at St. Day on August 3rd, in good weather. Entries did not turn up in quantity as was expected, on account of a mistake made in schedule in putting all the Canary classes except one, non-fed; it was a great drawback. The mistake was an oversight which will not occur again. Nevertheless, some very fine birds were staged, notwithstanding the moulting season is so close at hand. The Norwich classes contained some very typical young birds, which with a good moult will be heard of again. Also the group class (bred 1911) were a grand lot, a credit to the breeders. Special for best bird, Mr. F. Collins with his noted six-point Mule "Sunbeam." The Secretary and Committee "turned up strong," and did all in their power for the benefit of the birds; and all exhibits were on the rail by 7.20 p.m. Mr. W. J. Medlin (Falmouth) judged, and was complimented on his placings

WATFORD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A very successful Y.B. Show was held in the Conservative Annexe, on July 15, under the able management of the hon. sec. (Mr. Quantrell). The number of entries was slightly in excess of last year's, and the attendance was very considerable. The judge, Mr. W. Shakespeare (London) described the quality of the Norwich section as the grandest he had seen for some time. The Yorkshires were a bit down in number, but for quality were a nice lot. The British birds were rather short, but quality was good. There was a large Crossbill and a Yellowhammer exhibited by Mr. Buckingham, which called for special comment, and a Nightingale by Mr. J. Goodall, as well as a Bearded Tit (also the property of Mr. Buckingham), and a nice Pipit, the property of Mr. Quantrell. In the foreign bird class the features were a nice pair of Diamond Finches and a fine Red Siskin (Mr. Buckingham's), and a glossy Starling (Mr. Wombell's).

PUDSEY, STANNINGLEY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Second members' show of the season held Fleece Hotel, Stanningley, July 29th. Forty-seven birds were shown by nine members in five classes, which was fairly good considering the breeding season has been so very poor. The quality was very good all round, especially so some of the winners, which, with care, will be seen winning again at future shows. Members gaining most points at two shows for season's specials: Mr. W. Richmond, leading with 73 points; Messrs. Oddy and Galloway, 53. Messrs. Towler and Hargreaves, 32; Mr. Marsh, 19. Final N.F. show of season held July 31, when 76 entries were received. This must be considered highly satisfactory for a show so late in the season. The novice Norwich and Yorkshires were two grand classes, 19 and 37 entries respectively. Mr. K. Barwick judged, and seemed to give satisfaction with the following awards:—NOR. (7): 1, 2, 3, Calam; vhc, hc, c, Oliver. YORKS. (8): 1, 2, vhc, Precious; 3, c, Stamford; hc Prentice. A.O.V. CAN. (3): 1, 2, 3, Calam. NOR. EAST HAM C.B.S.

Y.B. Show July 29th, Hartley Avenue Schools. Entries totalled 73. Although not large in number the exhibits were of a really good quality, the Yellow Yorkshire class being exceptionally fine and perhaps the biggest seen this year (21 entries). Mr. J. Robson judged. The attendance was somewbat marred by an unexpected but no doubt welcome thunderstorm.

CREWE AND DISTRICT O.S.

Annual N.F. Show held Co-operative Hall, Co-operative Street, July 22. The entries were fairly representative compared with previous N.F. shows, and the standard of the exhibits was far in excess of any previous show. A Nightingale kindly lent by Mr. Walsh (Blackburn) was the chief attraction to visitors; also the decorations lent by W. Jackson made a fine show—palms, bunting, streamers, banners, strewn with profusion amongst the benches, bringing out the colours of the birds to the best advantage. There was a splendid show of young birds, and in many of the classes the judge (Mr. W. Bowyer, of Leek) had great difficulty in separating the birds. The foreign birds were the best in point of numbers, and some very good exhibits failed to get cards. FOREIGN: 1st, Bowker, beautiful pair of White Java Sparrows, condition faultless; 2, Greenwood, Gouldian Finch, greatly admired; 3, vhc, hc, c, E. Jaycott. British were hardly so numerous as in the spring show, but some very fine birds were staged, and will be heard of later. GOLDFINCH: 1, Greenwood, a beauty, with a good moult, it should make things hum; 2, Elks, ran winner very close; 3, Morgan, in the best of condition; vhc, Potts. LINNET: 1, 3, Morgan, 1 fine specimen, well pencilled and laced; 2, Jaycott, good col., rather unsteady; vhc, Bowker; hc, Greenwood; c, Potts. BULLFINCH, ETC.: 1, 3, Lawton, 1 topper, well staged, should be heard of again; 3, one of the finest coloured Bullfinches seen, but lacks in size to winner; 2, Cooper, very fine Greenfinch, grand col. and size. BRAMBLEFINCH, ETC.: 1, Bowker, very good yellow Bunting, in the best of condition; 2, Jaycott, a very large Chaffinch; 3, Lawton, well spangled Bramble, right col.; vhc, Jaycott. SISKIN, ETC., usually the biggest class, only brought four entries: 1, 2, Jaycott, very nice Siskin; 2, monster Redpoll; 3, vhc, Greenwood. CAN.—some very keen competition here for the P. Victor Williams Challenge Cup, Mr. J. W. Lawton leading on points. NOR. CL. YELL.: 1, 2, Cooper, very fine pair of youngsters; 3, vhc, Latham. In the Norwich classes C. E. Cooper and H. Latham were unbeatable, winning premier awards in all classes. YORKS. went to A. Elks, S. Potts, J. W. Lawton, and H. Greenwood. BORD.: Accounted for by H. Latham and J. W. Lawton. MULES: 1, 2, S. Potts, for two grand youngsters.—E. Jaycott,

DONCASTER C.B.S.

Second N.F. Show held in the Victoria Rooms on July 22, and a capital exhibition it proved. The entries were not quite so numerous as was expected, but the quality was excellent. Mr. Barker (Bentley) judged in a manner which gave every satisfaction.

Mr. Barker has promised to give a cup for the best soft-bill British, to be called the Frances Barker Challenge Cup.

DUNFERMLINE AND DIS. C.B.S

Annual Y.B. Show held Co-operative Hall, July 28. Although entries were not as strong as in former years, still, the quality was well up to the standard. Some very fine birds were staged. Special notice might be taken of the winning yellow Plainhead, bred by Mr. Thomas Wildridge, also a very promising dark Greenfinch Mule, the property of Mr. J. Rankine. In the British classes, Mr. D. McLaren had a popular win with a sweet Goldfinch, while the softbill winner, "Sedge Warbler," belonging to Mr. R. T. Campbell, came in for a good deal of admiration. Mr. W. Cullen judged the Canaries, while the British and Mules were handled by Mr. W. Malcolm. Both officials gave every satisfaction. CRESTS: 1, Meddon; 2, Coutts. C.B.: 1, McLean; 2, Coutts. WREXHAM CENTRAL C.B.S.

This newly formed society held their first N.F. Show on July 29 in the Central Institute. The show was a great success being well patronised by the public, which speaks well for the prospects of the club. The entry of 60 must be considered very creditable. Yorkshires were the feature of the show. Special for Best Exhibit fell to a beautiful Grey Parrot, shown hy Mr. E. S. Jones. Mr. Hampson made a most able secretary, backed up by a good chairman in Mr. Lupton and an excellent committee. Three new members were enrolled. All prize money and specials were paid out before the close of the show. Mr. P. Jones (Chester) judged, and gave every satisfaction.

HAMILTON (Cadzow Oaks) O.S

Y.B. Show held Lesser Town Hall, July 22. Judging by the members as well as the exhibits, this society is now the foremost in the county of Lanark. The show is held a little late in the afternoon, making things a little difficult for some of its members coming from a distance, but we understand that the difficulty cannot easily be avoided. A more friendly lot of fanciers from the president down to the latest member, it would be hard to find, and the reputation of the society bids fair to maintain its past high character. There were some very promising young birds here. In the Borders Mr. W. Hamilton takes leading honours, and wins special with an almost even-marked yellow. Mr. Allan showed a grand team of his old favourites, the Scotch Fancy. Mr. S. Williams' light Linnet Mule was much admired, although it was well beaten for the special by Mr. Naismith's dark yellow Goldfinch Mule, a grand bird of its kind. Mr. David Berry (High Blantyre) judged Norwich, and Mr. W. Brownlee the rest; and their awards seemed to give general satisfaction.

Intelligence of Rooks.

It is said that a tree never blows down with a Rook's nest in it. The Rook is a very intelligent bird, and is said to move its nest from any tree that shows signs of decay at the roots. In places where large trees are absent, Rooks have been known to nest in fruit trees and tall bushes.

Wood Pigeon and Jackdaw.

Although a large bird, no one would look upon the Woodpigeon as being a serious antagonist in a fight, yet one has been known to kill a Jackdaw that had evil designs upon its nest and eggs. Many small birds will fight much larger ones in defence of home, and are mostly successful in driving them away.

Just as we go to press we learn of serious developments in the strike of railway, etc., employeees, which has now extended to London, and involved the carmen of the railways and other distributing agents, so may delay this issue in reaching some of our readers. We hope not; also that the dispute may soon be amicably settled.

Kindly note my change of address from Newton Terrace, Carbrook, to 7, Tomlinson Place, Carbrook, Sheffield, writes Mr. W. Walker.

Will members of the Doncaster and District C.B.S., writes Mr. G. Will secretaries of shows in Scotland that intend to ask for the patronage of the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club kindly note that applications for same must be in my hands by August 31, with full particulars as to classification and judges? Also club membership is now due, and I shall be pleased to receive same from those members who have not already paid their subscriptions for this year.—John Allan, secretary, 13, Elm Place, Leith.

Allow me to thank you for the honour you did me in placing my Redpoll Hybrid on the front page of your splendid paper CAGE BIRDS. It is a life-like portrait of him, and is a credit to the artist. The bird was bred by the well-known British bird judge, Mr. J. Goodall. The bird has held his own well this season, winning 1sts at Bristol and Watford, 2nd at Clapham, Battersea, Luton, and the Crystal Palace. At our last young bird show he secured vhc in a class of five. Why he was down I should very much like to know, as he was in perfect feather and condition. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.—W. Buckingham (Watford).

I have been a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS for nearly four years, and I have found it a great help, writes Mr. E. Clarke, P.C. (Beaworthy). My first attempt at breeding Canaries was three years ago, with one hen and one cock. That season I bred and reared six young birds. This year I started with seven hens and three cocks, and my first clutches brought me 34 young, out of 35 eggs. I reared 32 of them (not bad for an amateur), and I have done well since. But I am now compelled to sell, in consequence of removing to another station, where there is no room for birds. I shall be sorry to part with my pets as they are such lovely songsters. I have not had any trouble with them; they feed and sit splendidly, and there is no egg binding. I hope some day to go in for Canary breeding on a larger scale.

The Goldcrest's Cradle.

The tiny Goldcrest is distinguished not only by being the smallest of our British birds, but also by its manner of nesting. The home is suspended from the hanging twigs under the branch of a fir, pine, or yew tree. It rarely builds except at a good height from the ground, secure from the bird's usual enemies.

Birds' Eggs for Food.

Wild birds' eggs were probably much more frequently used for food than they are at the present time. It is recorded that upon a famous mire in Norfolk as many as 30,000 eggs were collected annually. These were mostly Gulls' eggs. At the present day a thousand or two would probably be all that were collected.

The Departing Cuckoo.

The Cuckoo is perhaps the shortest sojourner among us of all our common migratory birds. Coming here in April and May, he usually departs in July, leaving his young ones behind, many of which stay as late as September and even October. Its winter home is the African Continent, reaching to the southern portion. It is also seen in the Indian Peninsula at the same time.

White Birds' Eggs.

There are many birds that naturally lay eggs that are pure white in colour, but during the breeding season one occasionally finds a clutch of colourless eggs deposited by a bird whose eggs should be of quite decided colouring. White eggs of the Robin and the Greenfinch have been found this season by a reader in Surrey, who last year was fortunate enough to see a pair belonging to a Pied Wagtail.

Small Birds on the Seashore.

Larks, Linnets and other small birds regularly visit the seashore, especially at dusk. This movement of the little flocks of land birds to the margin of the seas, and the strangeness of the place for them to seek a meal in the ever-deepening gloom, cannot fail to arouse in the observer the curiosity to know the nature of the food procurable on what from all time has been regarded as the least hospitable of all the tracts of land upon the earth.

Decreasing Clutches.

Although it is a well-known fact that wild birds are increasing in number, there is every sign that the size of the clutches of many species is not so large as in former years. One rarely now finds a Skylark's nest containing more than three eggs, and clutches of four Blackbirds seem now to be the normal number. Of the many nests seen this summer by the writer of this note, only one contained a clutch of five eggs.

The Sex Problem Solved.

When sexing Canaries, if this way you try
You'll find that you cannot go wrong:
Put two in a cage that is sweet, clean and dry,
With a perch about six inches long.

Then just wait a minute (or maybe wait ten),
But for certain—it's safe as a rock—
If she perches first it's a dear little hen,
And if he perches first, it's a cock.

A Queer Nesting Place.

A pair of Robins recently built in the bathroom of a house at Muswell Hill, just above the lavatory basin, which is in daily use. From five eggs three young Robins were hatched out, and the parent birds come and go through the window with the utmost fearlessness.—Robt. H. Wright (age 15), 109, Great Western Road, Glasgow.

*A Useful Parrot.

A gentleman who used to live in the country had a Parrot which could say anything. One night the gentleman went to bed, but was awakened by the Parrot shouting, "There's someone in the house." He got up and found a fellow had broken into the house. He telephoned for the police, and the fellow was caught—all through the Parrot. So Polly was a useful servant.—Sent by Harry Swaine, 35, Cross Street, Sutton, Macclesfield.

*A Redpoll Prefers Captivity.

We at home all love birds. Among others we have some Redpolls that dada bought from a dealer. For some reason he caught one of the Redpolls and caged it up, but after a few days it got out and flew on the yard wall. But it wouldn't go away, but got on to the top of the aviary, and seemed to be trying every hole in the wire to get in again. It did this all the rest of the day, so dada let it in again. It is quite happy now.—Mollie Cornwell (age 10 years), 121, Victoria Terrace, South Bank R.S.O., Yorks.

Swallow and Cat Sleep Together.

A lady in Grenoble kept a Swallow as a pet. The bird had its full liberty in the house, and soon became quite at home. The lady also kept a cat which during the first few days ran after the Swallow. But she forbade her to touch it. However, she did not trust the cat too much. When she went out pussy was locked in the kitchen and the Swallow in the dining-room. One day the lady had not shut the doors well, and she did not find out until after she returned. Her first thought was for the Swallow. She hastened to the dining-room and to her amazement saw pussy and the Swallow lying snugly together, like great friends, on a dressing-gown that had fallen to the floor.—Sent by Louisa Barnes, 5, Railway Place, Grangetown R.S.O., Yorks.

A Combined Seed Hopper and Seive.

Sent by Mr. William Blythe, 25, East Pontop, Annfield Plain, Durham.

I send you a sketch of a seed-hopper I use, and which can be made from two cigar boxes, a piece of wire gauze, and some cage wire. It is the same as the ordinary self-supplying hopper, with the exception of the gauze and a drawer. When the seed passes down the slide (A), it falls on to the wire gauze (C). The birds can then eat the clean seed, as the dirt and refuse pass through the gauze into the drawer (B). Another advantage is that the drawer can be cleaned, which avoids any musty smell from seed lying so long at the bottom of the ordinary hoppers. The hinges can be made of cage wire. I find it much better than my old hoppers, for the above reasons.—William Blythe.

A Bath for an Ordinary Wire Hanging Cage.

Sent by T. Shearsby, 12, Gordon Street, Leamington Spa.

I enclose sketch of a simple way in which to contrive a good and cheap bath for an ordinary hanging cage. It is made of an ordinary tin tobacco box, as you will see by the sketch.

You just open the cage door and lift this tin inside, and the lid of the box stops the bird from coming out, if fastened by a piece of wire (A). A piece of wood can be fixed to the front edge of the box for the bird to perch on, when it cannot cut its feet (B). One of the cage perches also goes by the front of the bath.—T. Shearsby.

In the Courts.

Canaries in Court.

Ernest Goldecke, 26, a cook, living at Bolingbroke Road, Hammersmith, was charged with breaking into a shop in Fulham Palace Road and stealing three Canaries, worth 21s., belonging to the occupier of the shop, J. Williams, bird dealer.

Dr. Cooney appeared for the defendant. The occupier stated that he locked the shop up securely on Saturday at midnight, and was aroused in the early hours by a policeman. He found that a side window had been broken and several cages in the window knocked over. A further examination showed that two Canaries had been removed from two separate cages and put in another cage, where there was already a Canary. (All three Canaries were produced in court, and the witness, in answer to the magistrate, said that two of them were Norwich and the third a Yorkshire.) Witness added that the defendant was a stranger to him, and it was a curious thing that on April 14 precisely the same kind of thing was done—the window was smashed and Canaries removed from one cage to another. In answer to Dr. Cooney, witness said he saw the defendant at the police station, and he appeared to him to be muddled from drink.

Police-constable 754 T said that at half-past three on Sunday morning he heard a smashing of glass, and he ran up to the shop whence the sound came. He there saw the defendant standing in the doorway with his back to the side window, which was broken. He made no reply when asked by witness what he was doing there. He appeared to have been drinking. Mr. Fordham: It looks to me like a drunken freak. Dr. Cooney observed that the defendant was employed at Lyons and Co.'s, and bore a good character.—The magistrate remanded him.—"Kensington News."

The Methods of . . Roller Canary Breeders in Germany.

By R. KREMNER.

The following paper was given by Mr. Kremner, before the Provincial Roller C.C., on July 29th.

This is an interesting phase of our hobby. I have seen in various parts of Germany many ways of breeding, of which I will give you five. 1st: For the best birds a first-class breeder uses only one cock and one hen; 2nd (which suits the pocket of the working man): To take the same cock to 3 or 4 hens, this being a more prolific cross; 3rd, taking 3 cocks to as many as 9 or 12 hens; 4th, using the one cock to five hens (this, of course, in large aviaries), and 5th, a method used for the commoner class of bird—place cock with one hen for 10 minutes, take him out and rest; then place him with another hen, and so on. Some breeders breed from 500 to 1,000 Canaries in this manner. Those which you see on the markets early in the season are bred in this manner.

Breeders in Germany start off for their best birds in the months of February and March. They use heat, as this gives them a chance of having their heavy birds ready in December when the shows commence. When the young are hatched and able to leave the nest they are placed in large flights.

Choosing the Singers.

Now comes the time for the breeder to watch the young cocks, and pick out the singers. He takes particular note of those that sing with closed beaks, and those that show themselves steady. This type of bird comprises his first class. He cages them off as soon as ready, and of course gives them special attention.

The next in order of choice are the birds that are acrobating about. Of this lot the breeder might be able to pick one or two for future use.

The third lot of cocks are those which sing with open mouths. This type he sells as soon as possible.

When caging up the young birds, he is careful not to cage any that are in the moult, and for a week or so he allows the birds to see each other until such time as they are used to the wicker contest cage which they use in Germany.

Egg food is never knocked off entirely, but used once or twice a week with lettuce seed in between. The German breeder considers this method of feeding gives a more mellow note to the bird's song.

The contests start in December and continue until January. When training his young birds for contest the expert breeder places his team of birds upon the table during the family's mealtimes, to enable the birds to attain steadiness, and to train them not to be afraid of any strange noise or movement. All birds are shown in teams of four or six; only one team to count in the contest proper. The breeder firstly states which team is for contest. The birds are judged collectively by three judges, and the time for judging is three days.

These shows are attended by thousands of people, thus proving their popularity. In some cases the rental of the hall amounts to over £100. A lottery is held in connection with each show, each person receiving a lottery ticket.

A Great Business.

Some of the exhibitors have to use for their birds a van something like our furniture van; this applies also to foreign birds which are shown in conjunction with Rollers. It is easy to understand that a great business is done at the shows, which will account for the very large entries.

Special privileges are granted to the schools, and the different schools are allotted good birds, which are afterwards presented to the scholars showing the best attainments in their classes. This is very stimulating to the rising generation, and I consider the money spent in buying the birds for this purpose is well spent, especially on seeing the interest with which the scholars follow the different rolls of the birds.

In connection with the bird shows, all manner of aquariums, filled with various fish, are shown, and very much business is transacted in this line.

I find the most successful fanciers in Germany are the happy possessors of wives who are as keen in attending to the wants of the birds as the breeders themselves. I must add that the birds are kept scrupulously clean, and a great amount of interest is aroused towards contest time.

I will now close my lecture, and am prepared to answer questions.

Mr. Kremner was kept very busy in answering questions, and dealt with them in a very able and interesting manner. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded him for the expert manner in which he had handled the subject, all hoping at some future time to have the pleasure of listening to him again.—Tom Routledge.

MOULTING and COLOUR-FEEDING.

By W. N. TURNER.

A Lecture delivered before the Pendleton and Salford O.S. on July 31st.

Mr. Chairman and Fellow members. It is a pleasure to be here this evening to make a few remarks re my experience in moulting and colour feeding. I trust what I have to say may prove useful to at least some of those present. Of course, you are all aware it is not necessary to colour feed every bird you keep, but it is necessary if you are to moult a bird successfully.

One of the Chief Troubles.

I think one of the chief troubles a fancier has to contend with arises from his not breaking up his pairs early enough. From my own experience I have found it best to break up pairs as far as possible about the middle of July, and only have two nests from young hens. By doing this you give your birds plenty of time to recover from the strain of breeding before they fall into the moult. The time for the commencement of the moult varies. Birds of the first nest will generally hold out until they are about ten weeks old, and the latter nests of youngsters not quite so long. Adult birds fall into moult at different periods, according to the energy they possess after the work they have gone through during the breeding season. No hard and fast rules can be laid down as regards the age or time at which the adult birds will begin to cast feathers; you must watch the condition of the birds. Be on the look-out for dropped feathers.

Birds become drowsy, mopy and slack in feather; when this state of affairs exists it warns us that danger is ahead. Be cautious and careful of young charges. At this time I give a little flowers of sulphur added to the colour feed say twice a week. This, I find, assists in loosening the feathers.

The moult is a great strain on a bird, leaving it rather an easy prey to disease if care is not taken. I cover their cages down to the seed holes with brown paper, leaving a space for ventilation. This helps to keep the birds clean and free from draughts, which are very dangerous at this period; and it tends to bring out the feathers quicker. I usually moult two birds in one cage where they will agree; and I prefer, if possible, to have a cock and a hen together, as I think they agree better than two cocks. I also find that they eat up the colour feed better, as nearly always if one sees the other feed it will come down and feed also.

Moulting in Cages.

I have tried moulting in large flights, but have found the best results from having only two birds in a cage. Of course, it is much easier to moult several birds together in a flight, and I usually do so in the case of less valuable ones.

One of the most important items in ensuring a successful moult is the free use of the bath which is one of the best "conditioners." A bird when being fed on colour food is apt to get its feathers clogged in places; and if those feathers are not liberated and allowed to fall in their proper places the quills grow wrong, and the feathers fall wrongly, which gives the bird a rough appearance. Birds are required to be smooth and tight in feather for the show bench. So that I am fully convinced that the use of the bath during the moult assists very materially in bringing about the desired results.

The birds which are in tip-top condition come through the moult quicker, besides being hotter in colour than the birds which are in poor condition. Therefore it is not advisable to work those birds intended for exhibition too hard during the breeding season. When they are done breeding feed them on good seed, and give a tonic to help to recoup their lost vitality and to regain the natural oil in the system which is a great factor in assisting the moult.

The Question of Colour-feeding.

I think I have said all that is necessary with regards to moulting, and will get on with the question of colour-feeding. The way I make my colour feed is: One egg to about 4ozs. of breadcrumbs, 3 teaspoonsful of fine sugar, and a pinch of salt, the whole beaten up well together with 4 to 5 teaspoonsful of colour feed. I allow a teaspoonful per bird, and have always found this quantity sufficient.

A good many fanciers use far too much pepper and overdo it. Always make a practice of mixing your colour food over night, as by doing so the colour gets absorbed well into the other ingredients before the time of using. By this method the birds are unable to pick out the egg and leave the pepper as they are apt to do. Place the colour food in your cages at night, and take seed away till dinnertime next day; then return the seed and replenish the colour feed if needed. I never take the latter entirely off. Repeat the process right through the moult.

Linseed; and Hot Pepper.

A little linseed is beneficial to the feathers, and I also give the birds a tonic about twice a week; this is a very important item as colour feeding is relaxing, and our idea should be to keep the colour in the bird's system for a reasonable time instead of having it pass through them too quickly as would be the case if no tonic was used. Sulphate of iron and quinine and iron are very good tonics, which greatly assist the birds during this trying period of their lives.

You may have noticed that I have said nothing regarding hot pepper. Well, gentlemen, for my own part I have not used it for the last few years as I doubt very much if you gain anything by its use. I have had quite as good a colour using nothing but cold pepper as ever I had when I used hot. I think the cold pepper sold by various vendors will put a beautiful colour on to the birds, providing only that they possess the proper kind of feathers. However, that opens up the question of breeding for colour, and as this is a discussion on feeding for colour I will leave it alone. But if there are any questions you would like to ask on anything I have not made clear to you I will be pleased to help you.

A good number of questions were asked, which the lecturer answered to everybody's satisfaction. Mr. Metcalfe moved a hearty vote of thanks, which brought a very pleasant and enjoyable evening to a close.

Wild-Bird Life.

Birds by the Sea.

One would expect that bird life would follow human beings and crowd where weather conditions are most agreeable, but excepting for the sea birds that are always to be found along the coast there is not a great number of different species to be seen. Of course, the House Sparrow is everywhere, and it would be a difficult matter to find a spot in the United Kingdom where he cannot be found. While sitting under the cliffs by the sea, far from buildings of any kind, we were somewhat astonished to see some half-dozen clinging to the rough face of the rocks searching diligently among the crevices and where a little earth had lodged and hardy plants had taken root. What the Sparrow could find in such a spot is a mystery to all but himself. One can understand his haunting the sands at intervals during the day or in the evening and early morning, when few people are about, for the Sparrow lives on waste and refuse, and there is quite sufficient in such a place for this hardy little forager, and even the big Gulls do not disdain to search along the sands for anything left by the holiday-makers by way of a change in diet. Of course, these birds are plentiful (where is the bit of sea coast where they are not?), and their movements and stately bearing while upon the rocks add life and interest to the surroundings. This last few days they have been living in plenty, for shoals of fish have been in the bay, and no one detects the presence of the finny tribe earlier than these grand birds, and they quickly flock to the patches of disturbed water where the fish are collected. The Seine nets have been out, and it was most interesting watching the fishermen racing to surround the patch where the Gulls were screaming and fighting. Some distance along the coast there is a rocky prominence where the refuse from the town is shot into the sea. Here hundreds of these birds can always be seen, for the Gull is another general feeder that does not disdain to sort over the leavings and scraps collected in the town dustbin.

Fruitless Labour.

The sitting fever is sometimes so strong in wild birds that they will frequently sit upon an empty nest; and the writer recently noticed a Greenfinch daily squatting upon a pebble put into the nest by some mischievous boy who had probably destroyed the eggs.

Thirsty Birds.

It is noticeable that fruit-eating birds visit the cherry orchards and currant plantations more frequently in dry, hot weather than during a spell of rain. Possibly the fruit partially takes the place of water, and saves them a journey of some distance to the nearest stream.

Concerning Cuckoo Eggs.

It is quite certain that but a small number of the eggs deposited by Cuckoos bring birds to maturity. Some authorities believe that a single female deposits from a dozen to sixteen eggs in a season, and, as the race simply holds its own, about 80 per cent. of the eggs must come to grief.

Young Birds and Eggs.

Young birds, when newly hatched, vary as much in size, relatively with the eggs, as do the old birds with the eggs they deposit. A young Sea Gull looks as though he could easily creep into the shell again to roost at night, whereas a young Curlew or Heron has the appearance of having come from much larger eggs. The cause is, no doubt, the lanky formation of the young chicks.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Colour Feeding.

A.M.B.—You began colour-feeding a great deal too early in the case of the early hatched broods, but if you have been using only, or nearly so, pure cold pepper, there is no reason why you should not go on with it until the end of the moult. The birds would take no harm whatever from having to take it a few weeks longer. The only harm that will result from it will affect your pocket rather than the birds, but then, the greater portion of the "feed" they have already had has been simply so much unnecessary waste. Had you waited until about the middle of June and then began to give a little colour two or three times a week only until they began to moult, you would still have been on the safe side, and a sufficient quantity of colour food to moult the birds completely might have been saved. As the blood will be well charged with colouring matfer, there is not so much necessity to get the birds on full strength feed for the first week or fortnight now they have started moulting. If, say, you use it half strength for a week, and then three-quarter strength for another week, the colour of the birds will not suffer in consequence.

Not Breeding.

G. (Wolverhampton).—The hen in question is one of those slowly developing specimens in which the sexual orgaus do not assume their normal activity until comparatively late in life, and in some few cases never do assume full activity, so that it is impossible to say whether this hen will breed next season or not. Some of this type certainly do breed successfully in the second season, but many more either refuse to breed at all or only make abortive and incomplete attempts to do so. I have myself kept one until her third season was well spent without success, and then she was still in perfect health and sound; but, as proved by autopsy, the sexual organs are in an undeveloped state. You would find a valuable contribution by Dr. Bowes upon this type of hen in Part 8 of "Our Canaries." I would advise you to keep the hen, if you decide to try her again next year, in a roomy flight and under similar treatment to your other hens through the moult and winter season, until next February, then cage her up, feed her fairly liberally, and give a fair supply of dandelion daily as soon as it can be obtained, and keep her well within sound of good vigorous singing cocks. As soon as the weather is favourable, mate her up, still continuing the fairly high feeding, with a lusty, free singing young cock, who will "drive" her well, and "show her the way." I should be glad to hear of her behaviour next season.

Two or Three.

S. A. Kearn.—(1) Your Redpoll query should have been on a separate sheet for Mr. Wesfon. Certainly cut the mandible back equal in length with the upper one. A small pair of sharp nail scissors is the best implement. If only cut back as above, there should be no signs of bleeding at all; but in case you should touch the "quick" and it shows signs of bleeding, touch the tip with a drop of Friar's Balsam. Stick a cube of lump sugar in the wires for it to nibble at for a time. (2) Dissolve a teaspoonful of common salt in a saucerful of cold water and bathe this hen's foot in it for a few minutes; dry gently and paint foot with a feather dipped in Friar's Balsam. You may repeat this a few times at intervals of a few days, but give the foot a chance to recover its functions between each treatment. It may slowly recover its grip from the first treatment. (3) The pair of Yorkshires were obviously not feeding properly, but without more definite particulars of management it is not possible to dogmatise as to the cause. Regarding what ought to have been done, it is different. The one and only thing worth doing was to transfer the young to a pair of reliable foster-parents when you began to miss the young, or at least as soon as you discovered what looked like circumstantial evidence of a cannabalistic trait. It is doubtful if this hen would ever be trustworthy with young. The linseed in your dietary was superfluous, and would have been best omitted. Possibly your feeding is wrong in other respects. You should get one of our practical handbooks, such as House's "Canary Manual," and look into this point.

Young Dying.

W.E.C.F.—From the few details you give, I think your failure to rear any young was due to "sweating," as it is usually termed, on which you will find a very useful paper in Part 8 of "Our Canaries." Had you given particulars as to how you prepared your egg-food I might have been able to suggest a line of treatment to adopt in a similar contingency, but as it is I can only advise you to pay strict attention to the general dietary, as detailed in our several handbooks, and given frequently in this column during the breeding season. The trouble may, or may not, be of dietatic origin, but if it is a judicious alteration of the diet and making it more varied will frequently tide one over the few days the trouble lasts until the hens take up their duties afresh. A little bread and milk should be added to the diet, and both this and the ordinary egg-food sprinkled with maw to make it more appetising. The young may also be partly catered for by hand-feeding to keep up their strength until the hen resumes her duties. As soon as she is seen to begin to flag, a crystal of sulphate of soda, the size of a small pea, should be added to the drinking water for one-half of each day, for a few days, and a bath offered daily in which a little common salt has been dissolved. Small portions of fresh, crisp greenstuff three or four times a day, and a little soaked rape and good sound hemp once a day are also useful adjuncts to the diet. Then a hen which behaves as yours has done when the cock is left with her will often hatch and rear the brood successfully, if he is taken away from her as soon as she commences to sit. It is too late now to expect much this season, even in the most favourable circumstances, so I would advise you to adopt the advice given in reply on "No Results," for the present.

Sore Feet (C.A.F., Windermere).—First of all see that your perches are kept scrupulously clean, and cover the floors of cages with clean gritty sand or sawdust. If you use the latter, give grit in a shallow vessel in one corner of the cage. Cage the bird in question alone, and give a staple diet of plain canary seed only, with a spray of seedy chickweed, shepherd's purse, or tender young flower heads of groundsel each day. Every third day for a fortnight give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and every second day a pinch of maw seed. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week. Bathe the legs and feet for a few minutes daily in a warm solution of boracic acid, say, a small teaspoonful of acid in a saucerful of fairly warm water, then dry gently, and anoint them with a little zinc ointment. If not well in about a fortnight, write again, referring to this reply, and I will advise you further.

Moulting Cages (Novice).—No, moulting cages are not altogether indispensable for moulting birds in, but they are certainly most convenient and advisable in the case of high-class show birds which are being moulted for exhibition. But for all ordinary purposes of moulting stock and singing birds, the ordinary breeding cages with the slides in and two or three birds in each compartment are frequently used, and are quite serviceable, as also are the ordinary flight cages, in which larger groups may be moulted together for the sake of convenience. In utilising these cages, however, you must be careful to give them a good dressing with some mite destroyer, if there is the least suspicion of their being infested in any degree with this pest before the birds are placed in them for moulting, as the effect of red mites is greatly aggravated during the moult, and it is not advisable to have to disturb the birds to suppress mites after the former have started moulting.

No Results.

J. C. M. (Battersea).—Sorry I cannot hold out any hope of your achieving successful breeding results this year. It is quite too late now to hope to do so, and your best course is to separate the birds ready for moulting and aim at getting them in good condition for a reasonably early start next year. Either one or both of them have not been in proper breeding condition this year, and I am rather inclined to think the cause is overfeeding. You would do well to get "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d. post free, for detailed general information on this point. Having separated the birds, give them ten drops of syrup of buckthorn in the water every second day for a week, and limit the diet during this time solely to plain canary seed and a little green food daily. After the first week add half a teaspoouful of summer rape to the dietary every second day, twice a week on the alternate days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, teazle, and linga, and on one other alternating day a similar quantity of the biscuit food you name, or an equivalent amount of bread and milk. During the moult give the bread and milk or biscuit food every third day, and sprinkle it each time with maw seed, and during the latter half of moult substitute linseed for linga in the seed mixture. After moulting, give a little green food twice a week when available in a fit condition for use, and at other times substitute a little banana, raw carrot, or sweet apple. Keep the birds on this simple dietary throughout the winter months, and in a comfortable, healthful position, well aired, but quite free from draughts and not subject to great fluctuations of heat and cold. Then they should be ready for mating again by the end of next March with a fairly good chance of successful results. If anything goes wrong write again and I shall be pleased to assist as far as possible.

The intervention of the August Bank Holiday makes it impossible for us to get all the Queries received answered in time for publication in this issue. These will be dealt with, however, next week.—EDITOR.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

An Ailing Grey Parrot.

Whitford.—Every fourth day, so long as the voidings are not watery loose, give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in drinking water (one ounce), and on the intermediate days put 12 to 20 drops of Allen and Hanbury's hypophosphates in the drinking water. If the attacks are preceded by excitement you would probably check them by giving three grains of bromide of potassium, dissolved in a little syrup. Usually the bird will sip this up. If not, then soak it into small pellets of sponge cake and administer these to the bird. Foment the affected side and leg with hot water; dry, and then paint with neat whiskey. As regards diet, give fruit more liberally; nuts occasionally; and a piece of plain biscuit daily. Keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in the cage, and add a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply of seed mixture. Try the above for a month, and then report progress, but if the symptoms should become aggravated, write again at once with fullest details. As regards general treatment, our Nutshell booklet, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free from our manager should help.

Aviary Queries.

"Aviary."—I have carefully read your query through, and have come to the conclusion that the Java Sparrows must be confined to a roomy cage—occasionally a pair turns up that are very interfering with other birds, and your pair appear to be afflicted that way. At times things run that way, in spite of numerous attempts nothing comes off, and at others fortunately it is just the reverse. This frequently happens even in the largest and best arranged aviaries, and one has to take one's luck in such things after doing all one can. I am of the opinion that at least a year of cage life would be better for the Javas, and probably cause them to settle down. Your arrangements appear very satisfactory, and luck will ultimately come your way. If you have not Zebra Finches, include these while you have the opportunity, also Bronze and Magpie Mannikins—all are fairly free breeders and interesting birds. Pleased to assist you at any time. Finches are fond of using common laurel, box, golden privet, fir, and such like as nesting sites, and all are good aviary plants. Spice Birds should rear a brood even yet.

Budgerigars Not Hatching Out.

Carter.—The eggs with one exception were infertile. She turned them out of the nest because they had been incubated more than the full period. There is no chance of success with ailing birds; get a strong hen to mate with your cock, and you will stand some chance of success. Cage the ailing birds up separately, and give each two drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the beak, and repeat the dose after an interval of three days. Bathe the eye of the Green cock twice daily with a dilute rosewater and zinc eye lotion (from any chemist). Diet: Canary, white and spray millet, green food (lettuce, flowering—seeding—grass), grit, cuttlebone, and water, with a few white oats as an extra. Our Nutshell booklet, "The Budgerigar," 2½d. post free from our manager, should prove helpful.

A Bald Java Sparrow (M.S.M.).—It would appear that the roots of the feathers have been damaged or extracted, and that it is quite possible the bird will be permanently bald, though otherwise perfectly well. Keep the bird caged separately till after the next moult, and supply it with green food liberally (as much as it will eat), and keep cuttlebone in the cage. Once a week put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water (one ounce), using a crock or glass vessel, and on other days well colour the drinking water with chemical food. About twice weekly anoint the bald area with clean vaseline, but do not use sufficient for it to run among the plumage and make it greasy; this will assist to keep the skin pliant. It should have a daily bath.

Loss of Young Mules.

G. H. B.—I am sorry to learn of the loss of your Mules. It is curious, for personally I do not find any difficulty in keeping them in health after they are five or six weeks old. Your method of feeding does not strike me as being really good; still, it is not bad, by any means. When the youngsters are beginning to pick over food, the latter should be placed on a feeding board, one of the most useful appliances out. By using this, they get on food very quickly; they see the hen feeding from it, and soon begin to follow her example. Put a mixture of food on the board—egg-bread, crushed canary, hemp and sunflower seeds, also coarse oatmeal and maw seed. Give, too, sprays of ripe seeding shepherd's purse. The seeding shepherd's purse is very valuable; young birds delight in it. But lettuce, watercress, etc. (non-seeding kinds) I avoid when the young birds are commencing to feed. Cracked seeds they must have for a time, and some soft food. When well on food a good seed mixture would be: Canary three parts, teazle two parts, hemp one part, summer rape, half-part, maw and linseed quarter-part each. Any of the special Finch or wild seed mixtures advertised in our columns will make a good and acceptable change, given twice or so a week. A little sunflower seed twice or thrice a week would also be sure to be appreciated; crack it, if necessary. Any of the usual green foods may be given—when the Mules are adult—chickweed, shepherd's-purse, flowering groundsel (not coarse leaves), dandelion, lettuce, watercress, etc.

Colour-feeding Seed-eaters.

Sheffielder.—It is not always easy, as I have often explained, to get Finches to eat colour food made in the usual way—viz., with egg-bread. Some fanciers get over this difficulty by gradually accustoming the birds to eating ground-up seeds (canary, linseed, and maw, generally). Then, about the beginning or middle of July, they commence adding a little colour-feed, working up the strength by degrees. A certain successful fancier of my acquaintance, with a liking for colour feeding Britishers (especially Bullfinches), uses crushed linseed only as a vehicle for conveying the pepper. Most fanciers use red-feed (tasteless pepper). The quantity of colour food depends on the bird—a rich yellow Greenfinch would naturally need less than a dingier-coloured one. One in four ought to be the outside strength necessary; one in six or seven should suffice. Use your own judgment. In my opinion, an overfed British Finch is spoiled; and some birds, buffs, it is almost waste of time to try to colour-feed. They don't "take it" (the colour). If you keep insectivorous birds I can give you a good "tip"—cage one with your Finches. I put a Wagtail in my flight cage with some Finches I am giving a little colour-feed. Seeing the Wagtail feed, they soon go down to sample what he is eating, and are not long before they acquire a liking for insectivorous food; the rest is then easy. I put the food on a "feeding board" and mix some crushed seed with it. They pick up quite sufficient colour. A Canary will also do to "show the way" to the Finches. I find many Finches very fond of a little soft food once they have tasted it, and then they eat the colour-food readily.

Uncertain Identity (A. A.).—It is very difficult for me to answer your question, as you give no particulars (size, colour, etc.) to enable me to identify the bird, beyond saying that it is "supposed to be a Hawk, and has a beak like an Eagle." It might be a young Kestrel, in which case the food-stuffs you mention can be supplemented by freshly-killed Sparrows, black-beetles (cockroaches), cooked liver and lights ("cats'-meat"), rabbit's flesh (with the fur on), fowls' "innards," etc. Hawks are often kept in captivity, but they are not admitted into cage-bird shows—Hawks, Owls and Ravens barred, is the general rule. Your bird, however, may quite likely be a young Cuckoo (I strongly suspect this to be the case). If so, you will find its toes arranged two in front and two behind. You will find full advice on feeding Cuckoos in last week's paper, or the week before. Cuckoos are very seldom exhibited; they don't live long enough, as a rule, and, further, they are not looked upon as "desirable cage birds."

A Weed (W. H.).—This is known as red neize and many Finches are very fond of it—Linnets in particular (as you have already found out). It is very good to give to such Finches as show a liking for it.

Siskin in the Moult (N. B.).—The bird does not require different treatment in the moult to that advised in the "Nutshell" booklet. It should have a little more linseed towards the conclusion, however; and some maw seed (half-teaspoonful) and cracked sunflower (a heaping teaspoonful) twice a week. Let the bird bathe freely; this is important. You must also provide wild seeds freely, such as plantain, shepherd's purse, thistle, hard-heads, groundsel, chickweed, etc.; let them be in the ripe, seeding stage. As you do not mention it, I take it you do not want to colour-feed the bird.

A Thrush Trouble (No Nom-de-plume).—I must candidly say that your method of feeding seems to me poor, and not calculated to keep a Thrush in healthy song and perfect plumage. This species (adult birds) does not require bread and milk. I advise you to get the "Nutshell" booklet on the Song Thrush, and follow the method of feeding advocated therein. These birds must have some vegetable and green-food frequently (such as grated raw carrot, finely minced lettuce, etc.), also ripe fruit and berries, and live foods (snails, beetles, mealworms, etc.). I have heard it held that the habit of devouring the excrement is engendered by supplying food that is not sufficiently nutritious and unsuited to the bird's requirements.

Red Mites (L. H. Gibson).—I gave full directions for ridding cages of red-mites in last week's issue, which doubtless you saw. You should wash the bird in warm water to each pint of which has been added one dram of sulphuretted potash. Repeat this washing twice at intervals of a few days; or let the bird bathe in the solution. I should be glad to hear the result.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Breeding Goldfinches (E. R. Phillips).—Thanks for your interesting contribution, for which we will certainly find a corner in "C.B."

Biscuit Meal (G. Thorneycroft).—Our Mr. G. E. Weston will give you an opinion on the three biscuit meals; refer to his query column.

A Perch (S. Frame).—This kind of perch is certainly very useful, while yours is neat and well-made, and we should think it would pay to advertise it—in a small way, of course, at first. You could also bring it to the notice of the large dealers in sundries, who might buy from you and stock it if the price be such as will allow a fair margin of profit.

CAMBRIDGE.

Fifteen classes were provided for cage birds at Mammoth Show at Cambridge on Bank Holiday, but as eleven of them had to be cancelled, it was thought unnecessary to bring Mr. J. Rohson all the way from London, so his engagement was cancelled, and Mr. C. A. House, who was officiating in another section, was asked to judge. Most birds are already in moult, and therefore out of show condition. Mr. A. E. Brooks acted as chief steward of the section, and the exhibits were well looked after. Mr. W. Driver, the popular secretary, had his hands full, yet amidst all the worry and the heat he was as cool, tactful, and courteous as ever.

NOR. BRED 1911 (7): 1, 3, cup, and three spls, Brooks, very neat Crest, grand front and droop, plenty of feather, well put on, some questioned the eligibility of this bird for this class; 3rd smart, stylish, nice quality Plainhead; 2, Beanland, good stout, well feathered buff Plainhead; vhc, hc, Allen; c, Thurley. UDDINGSTON AND DIST. O.S.

Third annual Y.B. show held Public Hall, Aug. 6th, and was a big success. 120 birds turned up to face the judge, Mr. G. Smart (Carmyle), and the task being rather heavy for one man, Mr. Cant (Hamilton) kindly consented to give him assistance, which we greatly appreciated, as our Y.B. show entries are increasing every year evidencing how the bird fancy is taking on in our village. Our first year showed an entry of 50 birds, 2nd year 90, and this year 120. This show was for points for our challenge cup, to be added to our annual open show totals, the highest over both shows to be the winner. The highest scores: 1, Campbell and Easton, 63; 2, Taylor and Nisbet, 48; 3, Shepherd, 37; 4, W. Turner, 33. The highest percentage was gained by Mr. Graham, scoring 24 points for 4 entries, and only his first year showing. The awards caused very little grumbling.

SHEPSHED AND DIST. C.B.S.

Third N.F. show held Aug. 5th, Pied Bull Inn. The quality of the birds was excellent. There was the grand total of 44 entries, Mr. Watson winning special for best bird in show. WELLINGBOROUGH.

This show on August 9 suffered almost as badly as Cambridge, as six out of the ten classes were cancelled. In the four which stood some nice birds were shown, and these were staged in the Cricket Pavilion thus not feeling the heat so badly as the exhibits in the other sections, which were in a tent, and several succumbed to the heat. Messrs. W. Howe, W. Quartermaine, and E. Taylor, the hon. secs., were most energetic and obliging, and everything passed off well. Mr. C. A. House judged.

NOR., BRED 1911 (4): 1, 2, Bateman, very smart clear and unevenly marked, grand heads and bodies, just a shade long in tail; 3, vhc, Howe, grand shaped clear, looks like a hen, if so, should be a real good one. A.O.V., CAN. OR MULE (4): 1, 3, Andrews, well-known Goldie-Bullie, and Greenie-Goldie, in nice form; 2, vhc, Howe, very handsome Can.-Greenie, lovely colour, shape, and feather, and a nice cinnamon. BRIT. GOLD., ETC. HARDBILL: 1, 2, vhc, Howe, hen Bramble, Greenie, two nice birds, of good shape, colour, and feather; 3, Cooper, nice little Redpoll, but going into moult.

BEAUMARIS.

Annual show held Aug. Bank Monday. The cage bird section, if looked after and allowed an extended classification, will soon be the main feature of this well known holiday fixture. The birds on the whole were staged in good condition, considering it is now the time of the moult. The Yorkshires were a fine class. Norwich were better in quality, Mr. W. H. Williams winning special for best. Mr. E. Jones staged a grand team of Goldie Mules, an even lot. The British A.O.S. were very good. There are plenty of fanciers in the locality, and in the interests of exhibitors we hope the committee will give this section their consideration for future shows. Mr. Jones made an efficient secretary. The awards were made by Mr. Silvester (Sheffield).

YORKS.: 1, Williams, cl. Buff, good length and position, neat wings and tail, good head and neck; 2, T. Jones, cl. Yell., lengthy and stylish, straight on legs, good wings; 3, Hughes, another Yell., grand length, nice outline, plenty of leg; vhc, Gallichan. NOR.: 1, 2, Williams, Yell., wing and head mark very typical, full of quality, good head and neck, plenty of substance 2, good all-round specimen, not quite so typical as winner; 3, W. Aiken, well moulded Buff, medium size, full of quality, nicely cut away; vhc, J. Jones. GOLDFINCH: 1, 2, 3, E. Jones, trio of good Finches, 1 good sized typical Finch, broad head, good depth of blaze, nutty brown, distinct markings, 2 close up, in fine form, 3 field-moulted, very neat one all over. MULE: 1, Donaldson, dark Linnet Can., in nice form; 2, Aiken, varieg. Goldfinch, often described, made a good second; 3, Pritchard, varieg. Goldfinch, typical in fine feather, very little between them. LINNET, ETC.: 1, 2, Williams, two good birds, well known, fine size, caps, rich col. breasts; 3, Pritchard, Linnet, good type and pencilling. SELL.: 1, Walford; 2, Hughes; 3, Williams. GIFT: 1, Hughes. A.O.V.: 1, Williams; 2, Donaldson; M. T. Jones winner of Hyde special.

HAWARDEN PARK.

Held Bank Holiday, Aug. 7th. Mr. Lloyd (Wigdale) had the secretarial reins in the cage bird section. We were pleased to see the duties in such capable hands, and there was a good staff of stewards, most courteous and obliging. Hawarden Park in itself will make every show a success, hundreds of people were there early in the afternoon. Yorkshires were the feature of the show in quality and number—without a doubt two of the best classes been in Wales. British birds and Mules were a treat, some well known winners being shown. Special for best Canary and Hyde's went to Mr. D. L. Parkes with a good Yorkshire; special for best British Mule, E. Prince, with an extra good sized Hawfinch in superb form. The seven classes contained 92 entries, the gentry of the district paying great attention to the Fancy. Mr. J. W. Banerofi (Sale) made the awards, which were well received.

Canary Breeding for Beginners

By CLAUDE ST. JOHN.
Post Free 7d.

A practical, up-to-date guide to Canary Breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby.

Contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing, and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, etc.

All the details of bird-breeding explained, while it shows the way out of all difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

A Canary with Air-Distended Skin.

Sir,—Has any breeder had the same experience with a young bird as the following? A friend of mine last week had a nest of five Canaries seventeen days old, and on Sunday morning he noticed that one of them was looking rather unusual, and on picking it up found its skin was blown out like a bladder with liquid, as he thought; but on putting a needle through the skin the bladder collapsed and the bird seemed as bright as the rest. At dinner-time, on looking at the bird again, he found it was blown out as before, hut on picking it up the air escaped through the hole he had pricked. He mentioned it to me on Monday, but I could hardly understand what the bird was like, so he brought it up to show me, and I found its skin was blown away from its flesh to twice its normal size. On pricking its skin the air escaped, and it was as bright as any youngster I have seen. But my friend, being disgusted, wrung its neck. It was brought up in the usual way, and the other four are fit and well. If any breeder has experienced the same thing and could tell me the cause of it through Cage Birds, I should be pleased to hear. A Reader and Breeder.

The Fancy in Ireland.

Sir,—Under the above heading a lot of letters have appeared in your columns, and in several of them erroneous and misleading statements have been made. Regarding one of these I am instructed to forward you an official contradiction. Mr. Connell, our esteemed treasurer, has been accused of giving notice of his intention to move the expulsion of members of my club found guilty of writing letters to Cage Birds. Now, Sir, Mr. Connell has himself, through the medium of your columns, denied this accusation, but your anonymous correspondent keeps on repeating it in every letter, and to try and stop it going on any longer, our club considered the matter at their last meeting, and instructed me to let your readers know that Mr. Connell never tabled such a motion. We do not know how such a wilful miss-statement could have been made, seeing Mr. Connell has made frequent use of your columns, but always had the manliness to sign his own name to his letters—surely nobody expected a man to move a motion to expel himself? I thank you in anticipation for publishing this official contradiction.

Interesting Observations at Everberg Aviaries.

Sir,—I have no bone to pick with "Aviator" re young feeding young. I am fully aware of and agree with his remarks, without commenting whatever upon his sarcasm. I did not say the incidents I quoted were unique or constituted a record. I merely offered them, as stated, as "interesting observations." There is, however, a vast difference between such occurrences in the open, under natural conditions, and similar occurrences in a small cage indoors, with conditions, surroundings, and food entirely unnatural. Mr. Editor, you yourself are largely to blame for the next "cut." I fully expected it after reading the printed sentence. I must admit I uttered a few choice words of disapproval upon reading it; such an impression was furthest from my thoughts. It would be folly of a very tall order for any private individual to assume such an achievement; or how could one hope to substantiate such a statement in face of the leading dealers, collectors, curators, and directors of zoological societies, the latter especially, who have vast numbers and varieties under their supervision, without ever attending to the individual wants of any? The idea is too absurd to seriously entertain for one moment. If my notes read as printed, I deserve all "Aviator's" satirical criticism, but if you refer, Mr. Editor, you should find your "blue pencil" is the direct cause, for it should read "to have personally kept and cared for more species of living birds in captivity," etc., etc., only slight omissions, hut when inserted conveying a very different meaning. The inference was I believe I have individually kept and attended to the wants of a greater variety of birds, not by any means the greatest number. I may be wrong (probably so), but I did not say I have, or I am confident, but "I believe." When I tell "Aviator" I have over 180 distinct species of living birds under my care at the present moment, which receive attention from my hands daily, and that these form but a portion of the many varieties I have kept from time to time, he may be convinced I can lay some claim to my assertion. It is understood, of course, that no knowledge of bird life is required to keep such a collection in good condition and health; one has only to hear one of Mr. Kearton's lectures and see one of his photos on the screen; the rest is quite simple. I will confess I am no theoretical bird student. I do not acquire knowledge from books, museums, stuffed birds, and skins, although this is highly estimable. I prefer living specimens. It is the mad rush to print of the carping critic that keeps many interesting and instructive episodes left untold. "Aviator" should remember there are thousands of true fanciers who have not the opportunities, such as he may have, for personal observations, but are keenly interested in the experiences of others. I do not see the columns of our Fancy papers much, and I have no inclination whatever to do so. I have nothing further to add, except to say that if "Aviator" is not ashamed of his name he should use it, and that I have no desire for controversy on what I contributed merely as "interesting observations." O. Millsum.

[Mr. Millsum is in error in blaming our "blue pencil." As a matter of fact, we made no alteration whatever. The sentence he refers to was printed precisely as written, viz., "Without boasting, I believe I can claim to have kept, and cared for, more living birds in captivity . . . than any one man living today." The words "species of" do not appear in Mr. Millsum's manuscript; he evidently overlooked them when penning it.—Editor.]

A Useful Blowpipe for Bird Cage Makers.

Sir,—I want to explain how to make from the very simplest materials a blowpipe which will be found exceedingly useful for doing any delicate soldering work, and especially for bird cage wires. The ordinary soldering "iron," with its copper bit, is usually far too clumsy to make a neat job, and if the size of the tool is diminished it will not retain its heat for any length of time. With this blowpipe, however, there will be no waiting for the iron to heat, and it is always ready for use, and very neat work can be done with it. It is made from small lengths of brass or copper tubing soldered together, as shown in the sketch. Two pieces of ⅛in. tubing (one piece about 4½in. and the other 2in.) will be required, also 4in. of ¼in. tubing, commonly sold for model steam engines. The narrow tube is first tapered at the end by alternately heating and tapping with a hammer until it is little bigger than a pin's diameter; the tube is then bent, and introduced through a hole in the wider tube, and soldered in position, so that the tapered end does not quite reach to the end of the wide tube. A small piece of wide tubing is then soldered, as shown; and when rubber tubes are fitted the blowpipe is ready for use. The gas is connected with the straight tube, and air is blown gently through the other tube, when the yellow gas flame will be lengthened into a long narrow blue flame of intense heat, an ideal for soldering. To use, merely spread a little soldering paste upon the wires to be joined, and place a small knob of solder in position, and apply the end of the blowpipe flame, when the solder will melt, and unite the two wires strongly and neatly. Linnet Singing Contests in Lancashire.

Sir,—I am making this appeal to all Linnet singing clubs in and around Leigh to try and arrange to send two delegates to the Globe Inn, Bradshawgate, Leigh, on Saturday afternoon, August 19th, to arrange for the following: First, that all time at contests shall be taken by clocks (commonly called "waggers") on the wall, and all time to count. This, we are of opinion, will stop all grumbling after contests, as we think that it is impossible to time by watches correctly. Secondly, to arrange contests so that they wont clash with one another. Thirdly, that all clubs be compelled to send so many birds to each contest, and also that the landlords of houses where clubs are held be compelled to send a sum of money with their members to be spent where the contests are held. These things, we are of opinion, will be a great boon to all clubs concerned. Say, for instance, six clubs join, and that each club sends five birds, you are sure of at least twenty-five birds, besides those of your own members. Also, say the landlord's fee be 5s. for each contest, that will ensure a great following of members. Fourthly (greatest of all) it will be the means of bringing all fanciers into closer touch with one another. Now, fanciers, if you will take the above into consideration, you will find that instead of one club having "the swing" in contests, all share the same advantages. I am not writing this letter because we have had unfavourable contests, but, on the contrary, it is because I think other clubs have not had done to them what could be expected from similar clubs. I could mention clubs that have to fight for existence. I know that they lose at every contest they run, and if it were not for the particular few they would fall. I want these clubs to study this letter, and write me as soon as possible, so that I can arrange the time to meet. I hope that all secretaries will put this before their members, as I cannot write them, for I have not got all their addresses. J. McAllister (Sec.),

SPECIAL NOTICE TO SECRETARIES, &c.

"Cage Birds" goes to press on Wednesday during the summer months, therefore club notices, reports, etc., should reach us on Tuesday to secure publication in our issue of the same week. Will society officials kindly make a note of this?

The Alleged Faking of Exhibition Linnets.

Sir,—I was much impressed by the manly and straightforward letter of Mr. Weston's re the alleged faked Palace winning Linnet. Can any judge do other than he did, i.e., select the bird that appears to him superior to the rest of the class, and then, after so selecting, apply two tests for faking, and then, these tests failing to bring to light any faking whatever, give the bird first prize? Personally, I can imagine no more honest and straightforward manner of judging. Supposing Mr. Weston thought the said Linnet was faked, even then he has no right to disqualify the bird until he has proved it faked. Things would come to a pretty pass if we allowed our judges to convict people upon thoughts, regardless of any proof. I think Mr. Weston's letter cannot fail to gain him increased confidence among exhibitors. W. H. Moore.

A Battle Royal Between British Birds.

Sir,—I send you the following account which a contributor sends to the "Daily News," hoping it will interest fellow-readers of your valuable journal, Cage Birds. I have never heard of any similar instance. Others may have done; if so, perhaps they will let us know through your columns. The account is as follows:—"I was, some years ago, the witness of a slaughter enacted in the air by a colony of ordinary British birds, the victim being a Cuckoo. The scene was in Lancashire, inland. My bedroom was on the borders of a wood. About four o'clock on a midsummer morning I was awakened by a strange loud screaming noise which attracted me to the window, from which I was astonished to see what I can only call a ball of birds, to the number of quite a thousand. They appeared to be at close grips, but the terrific noise they made was undoubtedly in chorus, if discordant in effect. Though the movement of the whole was apparent, there was little, if any, actual flight; the ball of madness apparently being suspended in mid-air over the trees. A full minute elapsed before I saw a comparatively small object drop from the congestion, like a stone, into the wood. A search led to the discovery an hour later of a murdered and multilated Cuckoo. Many body feathers had been plucked away, the flesh was torn, and both eyes had been gouged."

The Recent City of Glasgow O.A. Meeting.

A Disclaimer.

Sir,—Re your report of our meeting of last week, I would like to draw your attention to a part of it that must be contradicted, i.e., coupling Mr. G. Marlin's name with the other three names. Now, sir, I know that this is not any fault of Cage Birds, as you took the report as sent you, so your reporter was in error to say that he, Mr. G. Marlin, was accused of having knowledge that this alleged fraud on our society was taking place, as his name was not coupled with the other three in this matter at all. I may also say that in the opinion of the majority of the members present the charge made against Mr. Marlin was ridiculous, and had no bearing on the matter at issue. You might be so kind as to convey the thanks of our association, through your valuable paper, to the following gentlemen, who kindly came forward and assisted us this time: Messrs. Wm. Gray (Govanhill), James Philips (Glasgow), James Calder (Springburn), John McIllwain (Govanhill), George Aitkenhead (Glasgow), Thomas Smith (Govanhill), and Adam MacLachlan (Govan); also we congratulate Cage Birds on the impartial position taken up in this matter.

David Black (President).

Sir,—I take exception to that part of the report of the above meeting, which speaks of Messrs. Marlin, Jarvie, Roulstone, and Campbell in connection with the alleged withholding of information in their possession, as my name should never have appeared in this part of your report, as I knew nothing of this case until the May meeting, when the Chairman read a letter concerning the case. This was the first I heard of it. I would ask your reporter to kindly withdraw my name, as I consider it very hurtful to me as a judge who has always been straightforward, and who always will be. I wish Cage Birds every success. G. Marlin.

[We tender our sincere regrets to Mr. Marlin that his name should have been mentioned in the manner complained of. We should be sorry to cast an unjust aspersion upon any fancier, and can only assume that the reporter in question inadvertently connected Mr. Marlin's name with the alleged suppression of information by reason of the excitement which prevailed at the meeting at times rendering the proceedings difficult to follow. (Mr. Black mentions in his letter some charge which "had no bearing on the matter at issue.") We have pleasure in publishing this disclaimer, and in clearing Mr. Marlin from any suspicion of being concerned in withholding information respecting the case.—Editor.]

Sir,—The above association held an extraordinary general meeting on Saturday last, and it certainly turned out to be an extraordinary meeting in many ways. President Black who was in the chair, had a most difficult task before him, and that he got through it in a creditable way speaks volumes for his forbearance and tact. An outburst of temper on the part of two or three members was responsible for a large amount of time being practically lost to no purpose. That much remains yet to be done to purge the society of a few unscrupulous members was quite evident at the meeting, and it will have to be done before the Association can be on a proper footing. Personal accusations between members (such as occurred) should not be allowed, and they ought to respect the chair, failing which they should be asked to retire from the meeting. Even the reporters came in for a share of attention, Mr. Jarvie expressing himself to the effect that he was quite willing to reply to a question put to him to give certain names to the meeting, but was not going to do so to have these published in some bird paper and allow some man to earn 7s. 6d. by it! What a grievous subject, to be sure! It would be a perfect Klondyke to a reporter if such a high valuation could be put on any statement friend Jarvie could make. The writer trusts that he will always look upon his every word as a "nugget." It is a pity that the reporters present could not give a full report of the proceedings. I refer to matter brought up at the meeting which was purely irrelevant and out of order, and was ruled as such by the Chairman. It would go to show how valuable time is wasted, and more important matters left out, such having no important bearing on the business on hand (such as at Saturday's meeting). It is to be hoped that any future meeting of this Association will be entirely free of anything savouring of the personal element, and that members will see it their duty to stamp such conduct out entirely and set to work to give all the support possible to make the Glasgow O.A. second to none in the kingdom. This would be a tangible acknowledgment of the efforts put forth by the management, from the President downwards, and an incentive to renewed effort on their part.

A Member.

Sir,—What position will other societies take up in regard to the McFarlane and Graham case that has been dealt with by the City of Glasgow Association? Will they debar these parties, or anyone, attempting to show them? I hear that the intention is to show at small outside shows. If other societies do not debar them, then I say it is "no punishment." Can anyone tell me the reason that all the members of the City of Glasgow Association did not get notice of the annual general meeting of the society, or the balance-sheet of last year's show? Wm. McMillan.

P.S.—Would the members in Glasgow speak out, and tell us about the others in this swim?

A Mule-breeder's Experiment Rewarded.

Sir,—In breeding Mules with the Goldfinch, I have been in the habit of leaving the Goldfinch with the Canary, as he never touched the eggs. On sitting the Canary she began laying her eggs, the Goldfinch remaining with her. I removed the egg every morning, replacing it by a stone one, until she had laid her batch of four. On going to remove the last egg in the morning, I found the Goldfinch picking it, and on taking it out and examining it, found a hole showing the contents of the egg, and it was wet with the albumen of the egg. I thought I would try sticking a piece of gummed paper on the hole, and put it under her with the rest of her eggs. On the fourteenth day she hatched out all her eggs, including the paper-patched one. Has this ever been done before? It is my first season of bird-breeding. Hoopoe.

Can Passengers Take Birds Out to Australia?

Sir,—With regard to passengers taking birds to Australia, I have friends who were first-class passengers from Australia, and they had to pay for the birds they brought to Plymouth. The butcher on board has care of the birds. No one is allowed to keep them on board a steamer except in his charge. The sum paid pays for care and food; I thought for one cage of birds (three) it was very expensive, as a tip is given as well as freightage, but I suppose the latter is for the man only, as the freightage is for the steamer company.

F. B.

Sir,—I was interested in the letter written by Mr. E. Williams on "Can Passengers take Birds out to Australia?" I regret I cannot answer for Australia, but I had a relation who went out to America a week last Saturday, and he took with him a Norwich Canary which I gave him as a present. I was rather surprised but the fee of 7s. 6d. was paid for the bird to travel. The bird went out just in the same way as Mr. Williams proposes to take his. Mr. Williams will get all the information from the shipping people he intends to travel by Song Thrush's Curious Nesting Place.

Sir,—A nest was built this season by Sparrows at the junction of two large iron pipes which run down the wall at the back of a house situated at Wadsley Lane, Hillsborough, Sheffield. This was afterwards taken possession of hy a pair of Thrushes, which hatched and reared a hrood of young ones. The nest is not more than five yards from a walk, down which people are continually passing. It is quite open to the weather, and the old ones could be seen quite plainly sitting on the eggs and attending to the young. This nest is still there, and can be seen hy anyone from the walk. I think it is unusual for a Thrush to adopt such a place to nest in. The above can be verified hy Mr. J. Milne, who lives opposite the spot.

Important to Members of the Y.C.C. of Scotland.

Sir,—Will all members and intending members of the Yorkshire Canary Club of Scotland kindly note that the meeting for allocating patronage for the coming show season takes place on Tuesday, 15th inst., instead of Tuesday, 22nd inst., as per syllabus? Place of meeting, 71, London Street, as usual. As we have a record number of applications to consider and other important business to discuss, I trust every member will make a special effort to be present. Re show cages, members will greatly oblige hy letting me know their requirements hy the date of meeting at latest, as the order will have to be put in hand soon if the cages are to he forward in time for the early shows. The Rearing of Young Skylarks

Sir,—In reply to "F. W. G.," about the rearing of young Larks, I must say he has got sadly mixed somehow, as I know Mr. Allaway well, and hardly think he would advise the food mentioned for young Larks. The liver would purge the birds all away; it is for the older ones. Well, here goes. Get half a loaf of bread at least two days old, cut it in slices, and put it in a good warm oven all night. Take out next morning, and roll out fine with the rolling-pin. Add a teacupful of boxings (pollards), and mix well together. Keep in a tin and take out what you think you will require for the day, and add half a hard-boiled egg, both yolk and white. Press the egg through a grater. Mix well and scald with boiling milk or water (milk preferred). Don't make it too sloppy, but just so as it will drop easily off the feeding-stick. Now, sir, this is how I fetch my nests of Larks up with grand success, and I hope "F. W. G." will do the same. I hope also he will let me know through Cage Birds, as I take a great interest in my paper, having been a reader since the first number was printed.

The Keeping of Canaries in Dwelling Houses.

Drastic and Mistaken Action by the Officer of Health at Millom.

Sir,—I was astonished to receive a circular from an inspector of the "Nuisances Department" on the evening of August 1, giving me two weeks to remove 28 cages of birds in an attic room. On that date my wife left home on a visit about 11.30 a.m., and arrived home again about 8.30 p.m. I was working from 6 a.m. till 2 p.m., and arrived home about 2.30. No one being in the house then, I fed my birds as usual, not knowing that my room had been visited by the nuisance inspector and the medical officer of health. So you will imagine how surprised I was on receiving the circular named before my wife arrived home to explain what had taken place. I saw the nuisance inspector at once, asking him on what ground they were complaining. He looked puzzled for a while, then said it was the officer of health who was going to get rid of the birds out of living rooms. I asked him if they were not both clean and healthy. He replied: "You have got a very nice lot of birds. I myself keep one, which is fourteen or fifteen years old now, and I stand it on the table where I get my meals." He again advised me to get rid of them out of the house, as the officer was going to make us all alike as soon as he found out who kept birds. Now I will explain my own case as to rooms, etc. First of all, there are three in my family—wife, boy, and self. We have three rooms on the floor—scullery, kitchen, and parlour; above these, three bedrooms; and above these the attic referred to, the size of this being 15ft. 6ins. by 15ft. 3in., height to centre of roof, 8ft.—the roof slopes down to 3ft. 6ins. of the floor. I have about eighty Canaries, nearly all Yorkshires, in this room, including some very valuable ones, I think the best I ever bred. It has taken me a good few years to build up this strain. Being only a working chap, I should like to have the advice of some of our readers as to whether these officials can compel me to remove the birds, as I am of an opinion they cannot. I may state I have had the whole of the house inspected by another doctor, and have a very satisfactory certificate given in my favour, a copy of which I will send to anyone willing to help me. I should like to have your views, Mr. Editor, as the Millom fanciers think this a very urgent case, which should be fought. The fanciers here (at least any I have asked) have promised to join Cage Birds League when our association gets together again. I should like also to hear from the League Secretary, Mr. Fulljames, as to what steps we could take in the matter, seeing that our hobby is in danger.

Millom, Cumb. W. J. Park.

(It is regrettable that the Medical Officer of Health at Millom should embark on such an oppressive and mistaken campaign against bird-keeping, and we hope that the local fanciers will offer strenuous opposition to the realisation of his project. We shall gladly do whatever lies in our power to support them. It is a pity Mr. Park and the Millom fanciers are not members of Cage Birds League, for this is just the type of case its funds are intended to contest. The moral hardly needs pointing: bird-keepers should join at once, not wait until they are marked down as hoped for victims of some interfering busy-body. Possibly, however, the League will "stretch a point" in this instance, and lend its aid to Mr. Park. We are writing direct to this fancier, advising him of the best steps to pursue, and shall probably find occasion to refer further to the matter next week. The official in question cannot, of course, enforce his order without authority, to obtain which he will have to take further proceedings, and he will find it difficult, we venture to think, to convince others that birds are the "nuisance" he himself appears to imagine.—Ed.)

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE

OPPRESSIVE OFFICIAL ACTION AT MILLOM.

Notes by the Secretary.

Active Interference.

A letter from a reader which appears in the correspondence columns shows one phase of the activity of the faddists who are seeking to abolish by any and every means in their power the hobby of pet-bird keeping, and it gives very emphatic point to my repeated statements that it is not only the keeping of British birds which is condemned. Our opponents have in mind the prohibition of the keeping of "any bird, large or small," and perhaps this letter will open the eyes of the thousands of Canary keepers to the certainty that their own hobby is in very serious danger of a wholesale interference which is more imminent than many appear to think. The writer of the letter is not a member of Cage Birds League, and it is a debatable question whether the funds subscribed by its members may be justifiably drawn upon to test the legality, under existing laws, of the action of the inspector. Nevertheless, here is a concrete case in which a man who has spent years in building up a strain of valuable Canaries, and who is keeping his birds under conditions certified as being "very satisfactory," is served with a peremptory notice to dispose of his birds within fourteen days. Further, the inspector volunteers the information that he is going to serve all bird keepers alike who may come within his knowledge.

If the working man fancier, and after him the private individual who keeps just a single pet bird, or the bird-lover in better circumstances who keeps a collection of British or foreign birds for pleasure or study, cannot see what is going on, they must be blind indeed. It surely must be obvious to all who keep birds that they must at once combine by joining Cage Birds League, and so placing it in a position to fight with its funds any oppressive action of either extra municipal or private faddists.

A Gratifying Response.

I have the pleasure of announcing that, in addition to the list published in last week's issue, the following gentlemen have kindly agreed to act as local Hon. Secs. for their respective towns or districts. Copies of the Aims and Objects of Cage Birds League may be obtained from any of these gentlemen. I hope intending members from the towns mentioned will kindly enter through the medium of those who have been good enough to agree to act as Branch Hon. Secs. Most of them are Hon. Secs. of Local Bird Societies, and memberships made through them will be counted to the credit of their respective Societies in our Prize Competitions, and, further, one half of the membership fee may be allocated to the special prize fund for their particular Society. Will readers in the towns mentioned please take note of the address of the Local Hon. Sec. for Cage Birds League. The first list appeared last week.

I need scarcely say that I shall be glad to receive the consent to act of those Hon. Secs. who have not yet replied.

A Photographic Suggestion.

From an old fancier, Mr. Hinkley, of Chatham, comes the suggestion that at the next Palace Show all members of Cage Birds League present should be photographed in a body. This is rather a tall order, but the idea is a good one, and it may be possible to have it carried out. I shall certainly bear it in mind.

Some Questions and Answers.

Mr. Pyke, of Reading, in reference to the duties of Local Hon. Secs., asks:—

(1) Must they send up all money as it is paid, or save it till they get a certain amount, and so save postage?

(2) May they sell badges to anybody, or only to members?

(3) Do they deduct postage, or is that a special fund?

As these questions are of general interest to those gentlemen who have already accepted office, as well as to those who are inclined to do so, I am pleased to answer them here.

(1) I could not of course send receipts for membership fees until the money was received, and, as members would like their receipts and badges directly after joining, the answer is obviously yes to the first part of the question.

(2) Badges are only intended for the use of members. They may have more than one each if they choose, but non-members would not be entitled to wear the badges, nor would they be likely to wish to do so.

(3) Members joining through Local Hon. Secs. would of course each pay the penny for postage and the halfpenny for P.O., just as if they were joining direct. There would be an occasional small saving to Hon. Secs. in remitting for more than one member at a time, and this would recoup them for any occasional correspondence that might be necessary. No account need be taken of this.

Mr. Williams, Shipley, also asks if members may have more than one badge. The answer is yes, certainly.

The Special Prize Fund.

The Hon. Sec. of Larkhall C.B.A. writes that some members of his society were disinclined to join the League because they did not approve of the scheme under which a member was entitled to allocate one half of his subscription to a fund for special prizes to be given at the show of his own society. They agree that the annual membership subscription of one shilling is "not too large," but they think "that if sixpence were enough to carry on the work of the League then the subscription should be that sum."

The answer to this suggestion is that the Special Prize Fund is not the only fund to which a member may devote half the amount of his subscription money. There are the Literature Fund, the Defence Fund, and the General Purposes Fund. Members of the League have the option therefore of voting that one half at least of their own money may be spent in either of four directions, or it all goes to the latter fund if no special instruction be given. It seems strange to find anyone objecting to have a voice in the disposal of his own subscription in the direction which most appeals to him. The special prize fund was instituted with several objects in view, chief amongst them being to benefit the societies themselves by encouraging members to get outside fanciers to join both the League and their own society, thus strengthening the active ranks of the Fancy, and at the same time affording a means of enabling societies to add to the attractiveness of their special prize lists. It is in the nature of a recompense for the diligence displayed by a society's members in the interests of the League. Further, the extra special prizes would naturally have the effect of increasing the entries, and adding in this way both to the funds of the societies and to the interest of the show itself to members and the visiting public.

In any case, the Special Prize Fund must at least stand for the present year, and the desirability of continuing it will be considered at the end of the show season. I need scarcely say that I welcome at any time suggestions or criticisms and that no suggestion will go unconsidered.

"The Very Thing."

In my letter to Hon. Secs. of Cage Bird Societies I intimated that any comments or suggestions upon the pamphlet setting forth the Aims and Objects of Cage Birds League would be welcomed. One reply, from Mr. Duncan Grant, of Lochore, reads as follows:—"I do not think any alterations could be made. The pamphlet is a credit to whoever drew it up. I wish the League every success; it is the very thing that was wanted in the interests of bird-keepers, no matter what species they keep."

What Harrogate C.B.S. Says.

Sir,—I brought before my committee at our last meeting the Cage Birds League, and it was resolved to write you as follows: I am to be district secretary, and will get as many of our members to join as possible. My committee were greatly in favour of joining, but to join as a society, en bloc, would require a general meeting, so we thought it best this year to get as many to join as possible, so that another year raise our sub. to the society 1s., so that when a member pays his sub. he pays the C.B.L. sub. as well.

W. E. Ferguson.

Harrogate.

OUR FREE BOOKLETS.

I have still some of each of the sixpenny pamphlets on British Bird Culture and on Canary and Hybrid Culture, and, as long as they last, one of either will be sent gratis to all new members applying for a copy at the time of joining. Those of the old members who have not yet had a copy may receive one of those reserved for them on sending a penny stamp for postage. Only one copy of either book can be sent free either to new members or old, and when the stock in hand is exhausted I may not be able to get a fresh supply, so that those who would make sure of getting one of these useful pamphlets should send on their application with their membership fee without delay.

SUBSCRIPTION AND BADGES.

The subscription to Cage Birds League is one shilling annually, and the badges sixpence or one shilling. The sixpenny badges are in three forms: (1) a button for coat lapel, (2) a pendant for watch chain, (3) a brooch for lapel, cycling cap, or for lady's wear. The badges at one shilling each are mounted in 9-carat rolled-gold, and are in two forms only: (1) a pendant for watch chain, (2) a brooch for a lady or for cycling cap or coat lapel. Members should distinctly state which form they prefer.

JUNIOR BRANCH.

The annual subscription to the Junior Branch, for members under fourteen years of age at the date of joining, is sixpence. Price of badges as above.

PATRONS.

Ladies or gentlemen who are in sympathy with the objects of Cage Birds League may give practical expression to that sympathy by becoming Patrons of the League and either making a lump sum donation to its funds or subscribing an annual amount of a guinea or upwards. One-half of such donation or subscription may be allotted to any individual object of the League.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The qualification for Vice-Presidentship is an annual subscription of not less than half a guinea, and one-half of this subscription may be allotted to either the Literature Fund, the Defence Fund, or towards the purchase of special prizes to be given at any show nominated by the subscriber. Failing any such special allocation, the subscription will be devoted to the development and progressive work of the League, to advertising its objects and promoting its ideals.

Useful Birds.

Specimens of castings of the Long-eared Owl in museums show that these birds live almost exclusively upon mice and beetles, and that birds are very seldom taken. Owls have the peculiar habit of bolting their food whole and throwing up the undigested portions in the form of pellets. These pellets may be found at the foot of a tree where the birds nest.

My Opinion of The Blackbird and The Thrush.

By Mrs. E. M. SARGEANT (Worcester).

How pretty is the nestling Thrush—
A soft and downy thing,
A silvery jet-bespangled breast,
A gold brown shimmering wing;
A big soft eye so round and bright,
That peeps at everything,
A little open hungry mouth
That chatters all day long,
And looks like a golden lily
Plucked from a fairy song.

I suppose there are no two birds so widely known and loved as the Blackbird and the Thrush; not only on account of their lovely song, but for their intelligent and pretty ways in captivity. The first bird I had was a Thrush. It had been turned from a cage because it did not sing. It took shelter through my bedroom window. I soon found that it appreciated kindness; it became quite tame, and would play hide-and-seek on the floor, pulling my dress and pecking my boot if I would not play. It would come to its bath when called, and fly on to the window ledge when I said "Where is Harry"—the name of a little boy who often came to look at it. It would perch on my shoulder or head for a long spell at a time.

I did not know much about birds, and probably I did not feed it properly, for after a few months it died of diarrhoea. I was so cut up I thought I would never have another bird. But in the spring I had a Blackbird brought me as well as some Thrushes in a nest. One day I unfortunately stepped on the Blackbird's leg, and broke it; but I put it into match splints, and after a time he got about on it again. He had become very tame, answering to his self-christened name of "Pretty Dick."

"Pretty Dick's" Return.

One memorable Sunday morning a lad came to see how the birds were getting on, and stood with the door open, when, to our consternation, out flew "Pretty Dick" away over the house tops. That was at about ten o'clock in the morning. I felt badly about it all day, and went round once or twice looking for and calling it. At last I gave it up. But at about six o'clock in the evening I heard a shrill little cry of "Pretty Dick," and there was my bird on the wash-house roof worn out and ready for his tea, which he was almost too tired to eat, falling asleep with his head against my shoulder.

I never used to put him in a cage; he slept on a picture. When nearing the winter (I was ignorant then that they shed their flights at this time) he scooped himself out a hole under the back kitchen wall. I filled it up and scolded him for making such a mess, but he endeavoured all day to get the dirt out again. At night I lifted him on to his picture, but I found him dead in the morning. I shall not easily forget his reproachful look as he watched me fill up his winter quarters.

It was the outcome of this most unfortunate ignorance that made me study their habits most closely. I do not now let my birds out of their cages so much, because as they grow older their flying powers are so strong, and my space so limited, that they are apt to knock themselves about. And catching them, if they are not willing to go back, flurries them, and I think weakens their heart.

I am told that a Thrush has the largest brain of any bird, but I sometimes think a Blackbird is the most intelligent, for when they have been put out of doors, the Blackbird has let you know when it is time to come in by making a kind of clucking noise. And if the Blackbirds are in want of food or water they will rattle their tins and tap with their beaks on the floor of their cages, clucking and clattering till you notice them. They will let you know know, too, if a strange cat or dog comes in. In the same way, I have read, they are called "the bell-men of the woods," and I can easily understand how they have gained that title.

Thrushes and Blackbirds both let you know when they need a bath. They make a noise like rain with their wings. They are clean in their habits, if looked after properly, and will come to the front of their cages for a tit-bit from your hand, and will swell their breasts against the bars for a caress. If they are not put in their right places after being out, they will call to one another till they are satisfied that none of them is missing.

I have a Blackbird that says, "Oh! oh! my dear!" to me, and I have Thrushes that seem to say a great many things. These are some of them: "Where be you, beauty Joey" "Here I be," "Pretty bird," "Easy Jessup," "Pretty dear," "O dear! O dear, dear!" But who can write their chatter in the inimitable way in which they sing it, with their little runs and trills between?

Is it the Sweetest?

But I think that a Blackbird's note is the sweetest. It is like the tones of a flute varied with pretty turns on a violin. If the bird is reared in a cage his shape is perhaps more graceful than is the case when the bird is in his wild state. But a Thrush has more dainty ways, and does not snatch his tit-bit so greedily as does the Blackbird, but says "Thank you!" first. I find that they eat double their usual quantity of food when moulting; and they are nervous, so I keep them in a quiet corner, and lower their perches till they are through with the moult.

I don't know whether it is a rule that the best singers amongst the Thrushes are not quite so trim as the others. I suppose they use up all the energy singing their love songs, as they begin long before daylight, and keep it up as long as the lamp is burning at night.

They know if one of their company is ill, and are quiet till it is dead or better. If a fresh bird is brought in I feel sure they have some way of communicating with it. It soon quiets down when placed opposite "Joey," the oldest Thrush.

I like to see a Blackbird in a cage that is white inside and turquoise blue outside; this shows up his glossy black plumage, his yellow beak, and his eye ceres to perfection. I think the picture of a Blackbird presented with the Christmas number of CAGE BIRDS is of a splendid specimen, and the verses underneath recalled very vividly to my mind my first little black pet.

I notice that those Thrushes that have the browner breasts do not sing in the same style as those we commonly call "Brook Thrushes," though what the real difference is I do not know. They seem rounder and plumper, and the black tickings do not seem so large.

In bringing these notes to a close I can only, as far as the Blackbird and Thrush are concerned, say that just as I have mixed them up in this paper, so they are mixed up in my affections—first one predominating, then the other—till I feel quite certain I love them both best.

Some Recent Arrivals from Abroad.

Mr. H. D. Astley very nearly succeeded in breeding this species lately. In the July number of the Avicultural Magazine he tells us that "the nest was built on the broad ledge of a nesting-box, about twelve feet up, and was composed of moss as a foundation, very neatly put together and lined with fine grass-stems. There were three eggs, rather smaller than a Blackbird's, of a pale blue, blotched with rufous. Three young hatched and thrived for a week or ten days, when they were found thrown out of the nest." There is very little doubt, however, but that this species will be bred before long, because it is a curious fact that the tropical and semi-tropical Thrushes generally rear their young without much difficulty in this country, whereas the sub-arctic species or those which breed in temperate countries but at a considerable elevation (as for instance some of the Laughing Thrushes) rarely breed. Temperature has a great deal to do with the production of eggs. I think it was Seebohm who remarked that the Lapland Bunting, when it nests as far south as the Doverfield, breeds at a considerable elevation, instead of at sea level as it does further north. In the same way the few pairs of Snow Buntings which nest in this country are found on the top of the Grampians.

A Breeding Habit.

This observation seems to hold good with regard to most of the Buntings. For instance, in my own aviary this season the Black-throated (American) Bunting, which winters in the tropics, has bred freely, and easily reared its young, and some of the Buntings from temperate countries such as the Ortolan and Black-headed have laid freely, but the sub-Arctic species have done nothing. The Finches seem to be somewhat an exception, for the Brambling is said to have bred several times in aviaries and Mealy and Alpine Redpolls have reared several broods with me even in this exceptionally hot summer. All the above instances are illustrations of the general principle that the majority of birds stand cold much better than they can endure heat.

700 Indian Birds.

The huge collection of Indian species which Mr. W. T. C. Frost recently brought over includes the largest number of insectivorous birds which have probably ever been imported in one consignment. A few of these have gone to the Zoo., but the great majority are the property of Mr. E. J. Brook, of Hoddam Castle, Ecclefechan, who has a wonderful collection of Paradise Birds and Lories. The successful handling of such an army of Bulbuls, Fruitsuckers, Finch-larks, Redstarts, Fly-catchers, Drongos, Babblers, Thrushes, Rollers, etc., is a triumph for Mr. Frost, on which he is heartily to be congratulated. It should, however, be noted that not one of the Sun-birds reached this country alive, and these, as I learn from Mr. Brook, were the principal object of the expedition. This perhaps was hardly to be expected, as they do not do well in captivity even in their own country. For instance, the author of "Some Indian friends and acquaintances" tells us that "out of a very large number of apparently sound birds that I tried to keep, only one survived for more than a few days." The beautiful specimen of the Purple Sunbird, which Mr. Maxwell exhibited at the last Crystal Palace Show, was the only survivor of five. I also very much doubt whether, even if they had arrived alive, they would have been a success in an aviary, because Cunningham found them to be extremely pugnacious under these conditions.

My best thanks are due to Mr. Brook for kindly affording me facilities for obtaining particulars of this consignment for the benefit of our readers, of which, however, I have not been able to take advantage. In any case, such species as the above would be rather outside the scope of this column, in which, as a rule, only birds which are within the reach of all of us are discussed

Club Reports.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE & DIS. C.B.S.

At the usual monthly meeting there was a fair turn out of members. After the ordinary business the secretary reported that after meeting all expenses in connection with the F.F. show there was a slight balance in hand. The schedule for next annual show was considered. It was decided to include all open classes as before; also to have two or three more classes this year. We have got, up to date, the N.C.C. and the N.L.C.C. patronage.—G. Havver.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

A large number of members turned up on Aug. 2nd to hear a lecture on "Wild Seeds and Berries," by Mr. W. Pounsett, the popular assistant secretary. Mr. Pounsett, who dealt with the subject in a conversational manner, must have been to great trouble in getting together the splendid variety of specimens he had, which numbered well over 50. Dealing with the specimens in rotation as they appeared on the coloured plate published by CAGE BIRDS, he described the value of each plant, where it could be found growing, what birds fed on it in their wild state, and its uses for caged specimens, and then followed on with others that were not on the plate. The specimens were passed round and examined by the members, who all felt they had had a profitable evening, and were wiser than when they came. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Pounsett for the interesting and instructive lecture he had given.—A. S. Treasure.

LANCASHIRE C.A.

Meeting held Rochdale O.C. club room, July 17th. The following gentlemen were elected office bearers: President, Mr. J. Nadin; Vice-President, Messrs. J. Swalwell, J. Garner, and J. Oldham; Treasurer, Mr. W. Hardy; Secretary, Mr. J. Hampshire; Auditors, Messrs. W. Adams, and C. Whitehead; General Committee, Messrs. R. Barras, E. T. Turner, G. Thurling, T. H. Collinge, and J. Laycock, etc. The balance sheet was passed as satisfactory. It was decided to accept Mr. C. Whitehead's resignation as secretary, and to ask Mr. J. Hampshire to be Secretary. Last season's specials were distributed as follows: Champion section: 1, E. T. Turner; 2, J. Oldham; 3, G. Fitton. Novice Section: 1, T. H. Collinge; 2, J. Laycock; 3, C. Whitehead. Decided to leave patronage over to next meeting, which will be held at "Duke of Edinburgh," Oldham, on August 12th. Decided to revise judging rules, and that the Secretary invite members of the L. and L. F.A., so as to have a voice in this matter. Also that all gentlemen whose names appear on the hook be written to by the Secretary.—J. Hampshire.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting held August 3rd, Wentworth Cafe, Mr. A. Bradshaw (Vice-President) in chair. Decided to form a London club so that members can pay in any amount they like, to enable them to visit the next Crystal Palace show. J. Woolhouse was elected secretary of the London club. Several members gave a glowing account of the ramble to Edwinstowe, and it was decided to have another on September 2nd to Strines. Will all members or friends who intend going kindly give in their names to Mr. Woolhouse, so that arrangements can he made for conveyances. The route to be taken is via Hollow Meadows to Strines, and back by Bradfield (fare 2s.). Time of starting and other particulars will he announced later. Mr. Drabble opened the discussion on breeding experiences, dealing with many points that were of interest. He also answered in a very able manner the many questions put to him. Next meeting September 14th, important; arrangements for open show, a good attendance requested. Will members please bring ticket money for N.F. show?—J. Woolhouse, Assist. Sec.

NORTHAMPTON (St. Crispin) C.B.S.

Meeting held headquarters, The Foresters' Arms, August 2nd, Mr. Fisher in chair (Mr. Healy being in Ireland on a well deserved holiday). A free discussion took place as to the advisability of carrying on the Society owing to lack of interest. After a lengthy consideration hy Messrs. Nason, Fisher, Smith, Gammage, and Galsworthy, it was decided to adjourn meeting to August 5th, when a ramble was to take place. A vote of thanks to the chairman under such adverse circumstances, and the singing of "Auld Lang Syne," brought the meeting to a close. On the 5th 8 of the members turned up at The Foresters' Arms and took part in a most enjoyable ramble round the Delapre Estate, which is a perfect paradise for British. birds. The headkeeper kindly showed us round the pheasantry, and for a wind up of the estate ramble we visited the dog kennels. After a hearty vote of thanks to the headkeeper we resumed our ramble via Earls Barton, Grendon, on to Wellingboro, where we sat down to a most welcome meat tea provided by the host of the "Dog and Duck," an old fancier. After full justice had been done to the good things provided, Mr. Gammage opened the discussion from the adjourned meeting, and it was proposed by Mr. Galsworthy, seconded hy Mr. Fisher and supported by Mr. Timberlegg, and decided to wind up the St. Crispins C.B.S. and join the old society, the Hand-in-Hand C.B.S., which, we were all pleased to hear, is in a most flourishing condition, 20 new members having joined. The Hand-in-Hand C.B.S. this year has a membership of over 60, so we found a solution to a knotty question, and a most pleasant finish to a most enjoyable ramble.—T. Gammage.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Special meeting held headquarters, Crown Hotel, Station Street, August 2nd, Mr. de Maillet (Vice-president) in chair. A vote of thanks having been passed to donors of special prizes at N.F. show, also to Mr. Wells for his services as judge, complaint was made that no report of the show had appeared in the Fancy Press. In reply, the Secretary said he had not sent any particulars owing to the meagre support he received from a membership of over sixty strong. The opinion of the meeting being that the report ought to have been sent, Mr. de Maillet volunteered to send reports to the Press of the N.F. show and also of all meetings to end of year, which, judging from the reception, met with approval. One nomination was received, and Mr. J. Sheppard, who resigned at the end of last year, was re-elected a member. It was decided to apply for the M.C.Y.C.C. patronage, and classification for open show on October 18, 19, was dealt with and fixed as follows: Nor., 6 champion, 4 novice; Yorks., 6 champ., 4 novice; Crests, 2 champ. and 2 novice; Cinn. and Borders, 2 each; A.O.v. Canary (including natural colour Norwich), 1; Selling, 3; British (curtailed to 4 classes owing to the early date of show, the birds not being at their best until late); Mule or Hybrid, 3; and Foreign, 3 classes. The Chairman then brought forward a suggestion to make the meetings more popular with the younger fanciers, who, while able to obtain every information from older fanciers by asking for it, refrain from doing so. He appealed to the older fanciers to give at future meetings their experiences with the different varieties, and to hold "question nights" and debates, also a washing competition, and table shows after the open show. The subscription to end of the year is only 2s., and amongst other benefits it entitles members to show in open classes at a reduced fee. Fanciers in the district who would like to join will receive a hearty welcome, and applications for nomination may be sent to the Secretary, Mr. S. Mole, 87, Greenway Street, Small Heath, Birmingham, or through any member.—J. H. de Maillet.

LONGTON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held August 1st, Castle Inn, Mr. J. Davis in chair. Distribution took place of prize money and specials from the F.F. show, the winners of specials being Messrs. Leau 2, Davis 2, Hallam, Bagshaw, George one each. The classification for open show was gone into, it being decided to alter it somewhat from last year, the open section to consist of 8 Norwich, 8 Yorks, 1 Border, 1 A.O.V. Can., 2 Selling, 2 Canary Mule, 1 A.V. Hybrid, 7 British, and 1 Foreign. The open novice section was decided to give another chance, the classes to consist of 5 Norwich, 5 Yorks, 3 Brit., 1 Mule or Hybrid. The open novice prize money to be paid on the sliding scale up to 5 entries, 5 to 8 half prize money, 8 and over full prize money. I hope the novices will rally round and give us a "humper." Mr. J. Edwards started the special prize list by giving a china rose bowl. Mr. Filkin, of Fenton, was made a member.—Hallam and Lovatt, Hon. Treas.

NATIONAL BRITISH BIRD AND MULE CLUB.

Committee meeting at headquarters, "Feathers" Hotel, Great Chapel Street, Westminster, on 27th July. Present, Messrs. J. Robson (chairman), J. Dewhurst, T. R. Trower, C. T. Maxwell, A. Silver, A. C. Askew, A. Plumbridge and J. P. Carr. Letters were read from Messrs. Longden, Archer and Marley. It was unanimously carried that not more than £10 be expended this year in medals. Applications were read, and the following shows were allotted medals: Clapham, Newcastle, Manchester, Cheltenham, Sheffield, Nottingham, Bournemouth, Wimbledon, Coventry, Llanelly, Derby, Bradford, and Gateshead. The allotting of medals to the following shows were deferred until a later date, L.C.B.A., Swansea, and Crystal Palace. Messrs. C. T. Maxwell and A. C. Askew very kindly gave a silver medal each, to he competed for at the Clapham show. Will secretaries please note that all medals have now been allotted; therefore it is useless to apply for the club's patronage. At a previous meeting it was decided to accept the beautiful coloured design of a diploma executed by Mr. Burton. This design is a beautiful piece of work; portrayed in the four corners are a Nightingale and a Goldfinch, and Siskin-Canary and Bullfinch-Linnet Hybrids, which represent species of birds the club caters for. All the diplomas for the present to be presented to the cup winners will be hand painted, but no cup winner will receive more than one diploma. If a member wins the cup a second time, the year will be printed on the diploma. Mr. A. Silver very kindly presented the design to the club, and Mr. G. E. Weston a frame, so that it could be hung in the club room, or be on view at the club show. Mr. A. R. Jones (Crewe) was elected a member. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the meeting.—Plumbridge and Carr, Hon. Secs.

STONEHOUSE C.B. AND F.H.S.

A large number of members and friends met in the Bucks Head Inn, on 5th August, to bid farewell to our President, Mr. G. McAlpine, who is going to Lutie, Latimer County, Oklahoma, U.S.A. Mr. T. Mother occupied the chair, and in a few well chosen remarks stated why we had met, and called on our new President, Mr. J. Cuthhertson, to make the presentation of a handsome meershaum pipe and tobacco pouch, which our society had agreed to give. Mr. Cuthbertson said it gave him great pleasure to have the honour of handing to Mr. McAlpine such a handsome present, which he asked him to accept in the name of the society. It was, he said, the wish of the society he would have every success in his new country. Mr. McAlpine very feelingly replied. He accepted the present with the greatest of thanks, and said how sorry he was to leave our society, especially as it was in such a promising condition. But he hoped the society would continue to prosper, and that he would still keep in touch with the society. His present would remind him of the happy nights we had spent together. Our chairman called on Mr. J. Buchanan to lead off the concert, which was done in a very able manner with a grand Scotch song. He also gave some splendid violin selections. The following gentlemen also sang: Messrs. J. Cuthbertson, T. Sorbie, S. McNiven, W. McNiven, T. McNiven, A. Mair, J. Hamilton, R. Anderson, G. McAlpine, W. McLusky, J. Brown and W. Mackie. Mr. Mather made a short speech regarding our society, and the loss we would have in Mr. McAlpine's departure, as he had been a hard working member since the formation of the society. The company finished up by singing "Auld Lang Syne" and "He's a Jolly Good Fellow." Mr. McAlpine will sail from Glasgow on 12th August by the Donaldson line.—Wm. Melvin, Assist. Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Meeting held July 27th, Oldham Hall, Mr. J. W. Metcalfe in chair. Messrs. Davidson, Allsopp, Parsons and Gentleman were nominated for membership. Mr. C. E. Lloyd (Earlston, N.B.) was elected a members, and Messrs. Bretherton, Tempest, and Richards tendered their resignations, which were duly accepted. The bone of contention appears to he the raising of the subs. to 5s., and possibly there are others who contemplate resigning; if so, would they kindly send their names in between now and the 24th inst., and so save the society a needless waste of stamps and stationery, to say nothing of time? Subscriptions are due this month, and members are requested to remit, so as to make it unnecessary to have to send notices round, which all helps to deplete the funds. The N.F. show resulted in a loss of about £1. The secretary will be pleased to receive outstanding ticket money. The hon. secretary having resigned, the matter came before the general body, and after explanations had been sought and given, he finally decided to withdraw his resignation on the unanimous request of the members present. At the same time there is not the co-operation that should exist, a lot of the members taking things too lightly; and it is hoped they will take a deeper interest in its doings in the future. The patronage came up for allotment, and resulted as follows: Oct. 14th, Bradford West (Yorks., Nor.); Oct. 20th 21st, Newcastle-on-Tyne (Yorks., Nor. and Borders); Oct. 27th-28th, Manchester (ditto); Nov. 3rd-4th, Liverpool O.S., (ditto); Nov. 8th-9th, Swansea (ditto); Nov. 18th, Avonbridge (ditto); Nov. 17th-18th, Preston (ditto); Nov. 24th-2th, L.C.B.A. (ditto); Dec. 2nd 4th, Derby (ditto); Dec. 8th-9th, Bradford National (ditto); Dec. 30th-Jan 1st, Scottish National (ditto); Jan. 13th, Green C.A. (ditto); Feb., L. and P. O.S. (subject). Intending members are hereby notified that nominations must be in prior to the 24th August to enable them to compete for season's specials at first three shows.—Geo. Green, Hon. Sec.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.C.

Meeting held July 29th, chairman, Mr. A. Foulds. A good number of members were present. It was decided to give our patronage to the Wigan Club Show, and also to the Bradford Cinderella Show. Decided also to have one day's judging at our annual show, the judges to be five in number, so that all will have ample time to judge. All members are requested to attend next meeting, when important business will be transacted.—Tom Routledge.

BELFAST N.C. AND Y.C.C.

Monthly meeting August 5, in Clarence Place Hall, Mr. J. E. Adams, president, in the chair. There was a good attendance. As the arranging of classes for club show takes place at the September meeting, the secretary was instructed to issue summonses for same. An informal discussion took place regarding prize card versus prize slips, but the final arrangements were left over till September. Mr. Connell drew attention to the continual reiteration in the Press of an alleged notice of motion he was cited as giving to expel members writing to CAGE BIRDS, and the secretary was unanimously instructed to forward an official contradiction, no such notice ever having been given. Several other matters appearing in Press letters, also untrue, were deemed unworthy of notice. A full attendance is expected on September 2.—S. Bamford, Sec.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

Meeting held August 3rd, Mr. J. G. Hutchinson in chair. Correspondence was read from specialist clubs, and we now have the following clubs' patronage: Border Fancy, Northern Lizard, Yorkshire Canary, Ramsden Cup and Money Speciale, Open Novice Competitions Foreign Bird Bronze Medal, National British B. and M.C., Cinnamon Marked Yorkshire, Northern Crest, and Green Canary Association (Yorkies, Norwich and Borders), besides which we are likely to have all the northern clubs. The Nest Feather Canary Cup was presented to Mr. R. Tindale who won it at our last show. In presenting it Mr. Hutchison said he would like to see a medal go with it as a memento of the occasion. Mr. Tindale suitably responded. The members' classes were next considered and amply extended to give all members and novice members a good chance to bring their birds out. Messrs. MacKenzie, Gills and Pettersen have guaranteed a members' class for a "group of birds in aviary or cage, any variety, not less than six." This should he a novel and attractive class. We are all very sorry to hear that our late Chairman (Mr. J. Currah) intends leaving the country, and all joined in wishing him good luck in his new venture. Our show is creeping on us now, and we would ask members to see what they can do in the way of specials and adverts. in the catalogue. This is a cheap way to advertise surplus stock. The meeting was rather small, but the heat would account for this.—J. G. Atkinson, Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Meeting held headquarters, "Rose and Crown" Hotel, Waingate, August 11th, the Chairman (Mr. T. Dawn) presiding. The chief business item was the balance sheet of N.F. show held July 22nd, which was carried out in a new way, viz., fixed prize money, 4s., 2s., and 1s. for a 6d. entry fee. A good many of the members were doubtful as to the financial result. Fortunately we gave them a great surprise, which was brought about hy the hard work and energy of the secretary, Mr. T. Bishop, and his excellent committee, all of whom knew they had a hig task in front of them. Unfortunately the Balance sheet could not be passed, as there are 30 members who have not returned their unsold tickets. Will they kindly do so at once, as we are anxious to know the exact amount of profit? At present we have a profit of 14s. 4d., and when all tickets are returned we anticipate a good halance. This report was greeted with acclamation. After the Chairman's remarks, a vote of thanks was passed to the secretary, committee, stewards, etc. Other important business repecting specialist club patronage, etc., was transacted. We then went to our syllabus. For August we were to have a lecture on "Preparing Birds for Exhibition." This was delivered hy that old and capable fancier, Mr. G. Browning (Rotherham). He is just the man to deal with a subject of this description, as he has had a large and varied experience. He pointed out his difficulty, having only two things to deal with, a bird and a cage. Unless the cage was right and suitable for the hird, he said, the exhibit had a very poor chance of success. For instance, a large bird was altogether out of place in a small cage, and vice versa. Again, the colour had a great deal to do with showing the bird to advantage. Take the Norwich, for instance: if a bluer shade of enamel was used for Yellow birds, they would show to better advantage than under present conditions. He also pointed out that cleanliness was a very great feature in hoth bird and cage: in fact, if a bird was not well staged you could not possibly expect to win. The hest methods of getting birds into show condition were also studied. Mr. B. did not confine himself to Canaries alone: he mentioned various kinds of British and Foreign birds. A very instructive lecture was brought to a close by a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer. Don't forget September meeting, very important—arrangements for all England show in Cutler's Hall. Book date, Septemher 5th, at headquarters.—John A. T. Woodall, Press Correspondent.

Country Rambles

DENTON AND DISTRICT. B.F.S.

Second annual ramble held on July 30, to Hardcastle Craggs, Hebden Bridge. The leader was one of the members—Mr. W. Widgley, he being a native and very well acquainted with the district and its surroundings. The journey was commenced by having a very stiff climb over the old bridge and up the buttress (just to get the members used to climbing at the beginning). We passed Cross Lanes Chapel to Heponstall with its two churches in one yard, a little time being spent here examining the dates on the head stones, the oldest that was seen being dated 1500 and odd years. Forward from here we proceeded along the old Roman road past Heponstall Slack to Bleake Dene, with its little old Baptist Chapel, this chapel being rather of a puzzling nature, for the congregation have to go up steps into the bottom and downstairs into the top of the chapel. By way of a little sensation, we retraced our way over the wooden trestle bridge, it being a dizzy height from the water below. From here the journey towards the tea-rooms was commenced with an extra spurt—through the lovely wooded valley of Hardcastle Craggs, keeping close to the water, jumping from stone to stone to the tune of the wild birds' lovely song. The journey to the tea-rooms appeared to be only short. The best was made of the meal provided; in fact, one is never disappointed at the "Chalet." After a "wash and brush up" we made tracts for a Hebden Bridge bird fancier's (Mr. W. Spence) rooms, he having given us the privilege of viewing his stock; but we are sorry to say, through our not being able to state a time, he was out. The journey to the station from here was only a short distance, and we were soon speeding on our way back to Manchester and Denton, having spent a really enjoyable day.—W. Hopwood, Sec.

WALLASEY C.B.S.

Very enjoyable ramble held July 22nd, to Gaton via Bidstone and Woodchurch. Messrs. Benson (chairman), Mallinson (hon. sec.), Young, Barker (the well-known botanist), Alston, and several other members and friends turned up. Crossing the Wallasey marshes an abundance of wild seeds was in evidence. Mr. Barker explained all about them to the members. We inspected the old church built in the 14th century. Entering Bidston Woods we encountered a number of wild birds—Goldfinches, Chaffinches, Warblers, Blackbirds, Yellow Buntings. We also heard Mr. Alston's gramaphone for ducks. Proceeding on our way to Woodchurch through the Style Road, we came across numerous other species of wild birds. A halt was made at the "Horse and Jockey," where Mr. Benson generously provided all and sundry with a good substantial meal. Opposite this inn is the entrance to that historic old place, Arrow Hall. After a little rest we moved towards Baruston Dale—a lovely spot this. There were a good number of pleasure-seekers on the road. Messrs. Benson, Young, and Barker like the Norwich type best. Passing through the beautiful wooded bye-lanes, we walked on to Gaton, Messrs. Barker and Alston being the advance guard, having evidently sighted the Clegg Arms. On the main body arriving at this hostelry we had pleasure in drinking their health. A game of bowls—Chairman v. Secretary's teams—was enjoyed. The Chairman's team were soon "in clover"—19—1. Then Mr. Mallinson commenced to bowl. He soon had the game even—19 all (flukes)! The last ball he sent up to decide the game was like a shot out of a cannon. Jack Mallinson won the game, and owing to the extraordinary manner in which he won, he was commanded to pay for drinks and refreshments, which he did, but he says he will never take on the Chairman again. It was now 9 p.m., and a move was made for home. Some wanted to walk (14 miles), others said "Oh, no!" Mr. Benson solved the problem by booking cheap rates (9d. a head) by rail. Training from Heswall Hill Station we duly arrived at Seacombe, and adjourned to the Ferry Hotel. It was now 11 p.m., and we decided to go home, having had a most enjoyable ramble. Some said they were off again next morning, but Mr. Benson was more inclined for a dip in the Mersey. A more congenial lot of men it would be hard to meet. We are holding another ramble shortly, when we hope to have the company of some of the Birkenhead and Liverpool fanciers.—"Rambler."

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

It was a glorious day, was July 29th, when we entrained for Edwinstowe on our second ramble of the season. Arriving at our destination we first of all made arrangements for tea. We then chartered vehicles, and had what proved to be a most interesting drive. Leaving the village of Edwinstowe we made our way for a considerable distance through Sherwood Forest, and passing through Buck Gates (so called because of the statues of this animal which adorn it on either side), we entered the noted Thoresby Park (which is 14 miles round). It was here we saw some wonders of Nature in profusion. As we rode through shaded avenues of silver birch and stately oak trees which, more ancient than the rest, stand like sentinels to guard the way and looking as if proud that in the centuries gone by they had done their part in sheltering God's free songsters. Birds were seen at various stages, and the Pheasants were a treat to behold. Passing along we came to the famous Chestnut Avenue, with its wide stretch of green sward. Just beyond we came in full view of Thoresby Hall, the seat of Earl Manvers, with the herds of deer grazing about it. In turning a bend in the road the sight of the day was seen in a herd of at least 100 deer (all of them bucks). Passing through the park we came upon the old and stately Thoresby Castle, which, with its ivy-covered walls and stately towers rising above the surrounding trees, is a landmark for miles around. Leaving the park we passed through the village of Budley, where the inhabitants (through the kindness of the Earl) live rent free. Just beyond the village on the left are the Thoresby Lakes, and a beautiful sight they are with their score or so of Swans. After a little ride in the open we again entered Sherwood Forest, where we dismiss the vehicles and make our way to see the Major Oak. After a short rest and refreshment we made our way to our host's house. Tea was served on the lawn, and we did full justice to the good things provided. Some of the older ones, with the ladies, afterwards contented themselves with a seat near the forest, discussing the doings of our society and birdy matters in general; others made a tour of inspection in the village church; while others sought the seclusion of the woods, where, in the fading light and the quiet of the evening hour they could hear the call of the Jay and the cooing of the Dove to his mate. Sorry we were to leave such scenes and sounds.—J. Woolhouse, Assist. Sec.

ALWAYS USE OUR

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting question of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

JOHNSTONE C.B., &c. ASSOC.

Meeting held 10th August, when it was agreed to hold their show on 21st October. Mr. Taylor was re-elected president for the season; Mr. W. Walker vice-president; and Mr. D. P. Ritchie, Brookfield, Johnstone, secretary and treasurer.—D. P. Ritchie, Sec.

SCOTTISH METROPOLITAN (Open Derby) O.A.

New members for 1911 to be added to list published last June:—J. P. Baxter (Leith), R. Findlay (Darvel), J. Rodgers (Slateford), A. Weeton (Edinburgh). These additional names increase the total number to 184, and make a record entry for our Derby. The executive are highly satisfied with this result, and thank all who were instrumental in bringing it about.—J. R. Meikle, Sec.

WEST STANLEY AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held headquarters, Aug. 12th, Mr. W. Butler in chair. There was a splendid turn-out of members, one of the best for some months. The business was the election of two judges for annual show, Jan. 20th. The two elected were Messrs. W. Reid (Sunderland) and J. Shepherd (Newcastle). The secretary reported that the New Town hall had been secured for the show; it is one of the best adapted places in the district for a bird show, being well lighted, well heated, and well ventilated. Members have had a fair breeding season, and we should have a record entry for our show.—W. Elliott, Sec.

WIGAN AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held Headquarters, Legs of Man Hotel, Mr. P. Vickers in chair. The show date was fixed for November 24th and 25th. We have secured patronage of Provincial Roller Club for Roller section, which gave great satisfaction to Roller members. Messrs. W. Ridge and P. Vickers gave good accounts of their attendance as delegates to meeting re forming Lancashire and Cheshire Union. It was decided to hold fortnightly meetings up to the show date. One of our members has promised to read an article, which should prove very interesting. Members and friends are invited to attend.—W. Dyer, Hon. Sec.

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Meeting held Headquarters, Sydenham Hotel, Aug. 9th. Chairman Willmott was in his usual place, and the small amount of business was soon got through by about 16 members. Messrs. Raley and Dean were elected members, and the chairman congratulated all present on the splendid progress the society had made, as we had a balance in hand of nearly £5, and 38 members on the books, which for a half year's work proved the value of the society for bird fanciers in the South Birmingham district. A lengthy discussion took place on the autumn programme, and members' show, and it was resolved that in the second week in October an expert give exhibition in the washing of birds, to be followed by a member's washing competition. The date of members' show was left until September meeting, as we could not see our treasurer—he being on his holiday—with reference to our having room for Dec. 26th.—J. Sheppard, Sec.

NORTH. BORDER & SCOTCH F.C.

Meeting held August 14th. There was a good turn-out of members. The following new members were proposed and accepted as members: Dr. Henry, Messrs. Dowson, Greenwell, Greason, Marshall, Stephson, and Walker. Correspondence from the secretary of the Northern Crest Club was read re the holding of a combined social for the distribution of prizes and specials won by the members of the specialist clubs in the North; it was unanimously agreed that we join in. Patronage was allotted to four shows out of six, as follows: Chopwell, Newcastle, Blaydon, and Gateshead. We still desire to grant patronage to two shows, and secretaries should apply before we decide finally who shall be the remaining ones to receive same. It was moved and carried that we must have at least four classes for clears and marks, one for greens and cinnamons, and one for Scotch Fancies. Mr. Currah proposed, and Mr. Johnson seconded, that the best thanks of the society be given to the Border Fancy C.C. for their kindness in granting us the loan of the model for our rules; this was unanimously carried.

GATESHEAD AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held Aug. 9th, Mr. Tindle (chairman) being absent, Mr. Almond (late chairman) kindly presided. Correspondence was read from specialist clubs re patronage, and we have now obtained the following clubs' patronage:—N.C.C. cup patronage; B.F.C.C.; E. and W.B.F.C.; N.B.B. and M.C. (silver medals for both sections); and Foreign B.C. (bronze medal). It was decided to have a table show on Aug. 23rd, for birds in nest feather, Mr. J. Maddison (Newcastle) to judge. We hope to have a good turn up of young birds, also of wild birds, as the close season being now over our British bird fanciers will get a chance. Classes (1 for champions and 1 for novices, each variety Canaries): Nor.; Yorks.; Borders; Crest or C.B.; A.O.V. Can.; Mule or Hyb. Champ.; ditto Novice; British: Linnets, house-moulted; ditto field-moulted; Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite; Greenfinch; A.O.S. Finch or Bunting; Foreign: Champ.; ditto Novice. Birds to be staged by 8 o'c. prompt, at Lockhart's Cafe, High Street. In the foreign bird section previous winners are debarred. Will members please note that at our next meeting, Sept. 13th, we will reconsider members' classes for open show.—A. Holden, Sec.

WALLSEND C.B.A.

Meeting held Station Hotel, August 9th. A good number of members turned up. Mr. J. Johnston in the chair. A long discussion followed upon the classes and prize money. Two more classes were added, making 45 in all. Prize money is to be paid full on seven entries, and half for less than seven. Three new members were added to the swelling roll. The question as to when members ought to be taken on for the year was also fully discussed, and the feeling prevailed that we ought to take eligible fanciers when we can get them, several being mentioned as wishing to join. We say to all, "Come along, and we will give you a fancier's greeting." Also agreed to have a short paper on some suitable subject for next meeting, and Mr. Slack kindly offered to give some reminiscences of his birdie experiences. It was decided to have schedules, tickets, and all necessary work sent to printer in good time, and that the names of all winning members be written on the prize cards, instead of printing a catalogue for the show, this answering quite as good. The question of securing specials was left over until next month, and this ended a very enjoyable meeting.—Macdonald and Evans, Secs.

Jeffrey, Hon. Sec.

HEMSWORTH & DIST. C.B.S.

Members' second show, held August 5th, when Mr. Edmondson (Bradford) judged the 27 entries in 7 classes—a poor entry for a club with 26 members, and not much encouragement for the secretary to get specials for the shows. Mr. Edmondson gave every satisfaction. CLASS 1: 1, Davis; 2, Kelsey; 3, Gillings. CLASS 2: 1, Taylor; 2, Lunn; 3, Ramsden. CLASS 3: 1, Lord; 2, Davis; 3, Taylor; vhc, Lee; hc, Gillings. LLANBEDR (Merioneth).

Show held August 12th in glorious weather. The cage bird section was under cover, and the birds nicely staged. The entries were very short; unfortunately, the show was held the same day as Vaynol Park. On the other hand, the moulting season would partly account. The secretary was Mr. E. Jones once more; he is well known as a willing and obliging official, ably assisted by capable stewards. The committee are to be congratulated on their classification, and on their good and numerous specials. Mr. J. Kershaw (Llanrwst) judged, and gave satisfaction.

VAYNOL PARK (Port Dinorwic).

Fifth annual show of cage birds, etc., held August 12th, in large tents in Vaynol Park, the seat of Sir Charles Assbeton-Smith, Bart. This gentleman is president of the show, and a very strong working committee carries out the arrangements with the following chief officials: Chairman, Mr. H. Weaver; vice-chairman, Mr. W. T. Davies; treasurer, Mr. J. E. Williams; secretary, Mr. R. Hughes. There was a fine entry in cage birds, the total being 46 more than last year, which highly pleased all concerned. Norwich led the way with some very choice typical birds, in fine condition, and competition ruled keen. Yorkshires were especially good, and some lovely specimens were on view, particularly in the 1911 bred class—24 of them, and a grand lot they were. There was also a very fine Border class; Carnarvon exhibitors put down some very choice birds here. Hybrids were led by a splendid Dark Yellow Goldfinch-Canary in grand order. A few grand Goldfinches were led off by a charming Finch of Mr. E. Jones (of Carnarvon). The winner in the Bullfinches was also tip-top. Specials were given in every class. Mr. Chas. Houlton judged, and all seemed very pleased.

*Friendly Sparrows.

A friend of ours, who is in an engine house, has two very tame Sparrows, who visits him many times during the day. The noise of the engine does not frighten them a bit, and they hop about while it is going. He calls one "Joe" and the other "Betty," and they answer to their names. When he calls them they come and hop on to his shoulder, and on to his hands. When he talks to them they chirp back to him. They seem to know when it is meal time. Recently they brought another Sparrow with them. So our friend has three visitors now.—Sent by Doris Lycett (age 14), Apidale View, Chesterton, Staffs.

*An Amusing Budgerigar.

My father has a Budgerigar. It is most amusing. When my father comes downstairs in the morning the bird calls till it is answered, and when he comes home from work the Budgerigar whistles, "Aren't you coming?" When we go to bed it kisses most perfectly. Dada has hung some bells on a swing, and a dummy pigeon in its cage. It jumps on the swing; then sets all the bells going. It has a favourite bell, a little larger than the others; it heads it, and then drops its head to miss the return. It can mock anything, but cannot talk.—Sent by John Nicks, 44, Teignmouth Road, Bournbrook, Birmingham.

Polly's Fault.

A certain lady, who lives in this town, once owned a talking Parrot which played a very comical trick upon her. The coalman once called when this lady was out, and, hearing a voice from inside the house call out, "Not to-day, thank you," went off. Next time he called the lady asked him why he did not leave her the usual amount of coals the last time he called. He said she called out to him that she did not want any. This she at once denied, explaining that she was out that day. Just then the Parrot caught sight of the coalman, and cried out, "Not to-day, thank you"! Then they both understood.—Sent by G. Simmans (age 15), 19, St. Paul's Road, Barking, Essex.

I have to thank you for such a pleasant surprise I had in seeing a reproduction of one of my birds on the cover of CAGE BIRDS last week. The past season has been one of my best as regards quality, and I have hopes of moulting out some good birds, and also repeating my young stock successes at the annual shows.—R. P. Harper (London, N.).

Birds' Tongues.

There is a vast difference in the tongues of birds. The tongue is frequently very small in birds which have the bill, mouth and gullet very large, so that bulky food can be swallowed whole and easily. In others it is large and long; birds having such are as a rule delicate feeders taking small insects, one at a time.

Pussy's Tears.

One morning as I was going to school three months ago, I saw a little bird in a stable-yard rolled up like a ball. I picked it up and went home with it. My father said it was a Lark with one eye, and he wanted to put it out of pain at once. But I cried for my little dickie bird, so my father let me have a cage to put it in, and I fed it well. It is singing now. One day Pussy went to the cage for little Dickie, but when Pussy saw that Dickie had only one eye, she turned her head away and cried.

(The above was sent us from Newcastle for our "Young Naturalist" column. We think Pussy certainly deserves a prize—she is so good and so tender-hearted—but unfortunately we only give prizes for anecdotes which have birdie heroes and heroines. We hope Pussy may meet her just reward in the feline hereafter.—Editor.)

Edible Birds' Nests.

The edible birds' nests (the delight of the Chinese) are made by a species of Swift, which secrete from their salivary glands, a fluid, which rapidly hardens as it dries on exposure to the air into a substance resembling isinglass. The caves in which these birds build are private property and strictly preserved.

The Rose-Coloured Starling.

The Rosy Pastor, or Rose-coloured Starling is an occasional visitor to the British Islands. It is a very erratic bird in its movements. Even abroad flocks will suddenly appear in districts to which previously it has been a stranger, rear young there and as suddenly disappear. It is a well-known bird in India, but seldom occurs in Africa.

Notes on the Robin.

Curious as it may appear, the Eastern limit of the Redbreast is not well defined, although the birds are common throughout Europe. In Northern Persia it is replaced by a very nearly allied form, distinguishable from its more ruddy hues, while in China and Japan another form is found in which the sexes differ somewhat in plumage.

All About the Norwich Plainhead Canary.

By J. A. T. Woodall.

(Concluded from opposite page).

A teaspoonful of colour food per day is supposed to have the desired effect, but I always let the birds have as much as they will eat. You will find that some birds eat the food much more readily than others, and some you have almost to starve to it. If I have a bird that refuses colour food, I always take off the seed box at night. I give this particular bird the quantity I consider necessary each morning to get the desired colour, and return the seed box at dinner time. You will find that by so doing your bird will invariably eat the colour food readily after a week or so of treatment in this manner.

Points to Remember.

Another very important item is to give your birds the colour food every day. It is no use giving it one day and missing it the next; you must carry the process out systematically in order to get a level and even colour on your birds. If they moult out patchy in colour, that is, not level in colour, they are absolutely spoilt from an exhibition point of view until the next moult.

You will find that some of your birds come out a much hotter colour than others, although they have exactly the same treatment. That is accounted for by the amount of natural colour bred in the birds.

Towards the end of the moult I always give a small crystal of sulphate of iron in the water; this acts as a tonic and also fixes the colour on the plumage. You will find that unless you use something to fix the colour, as the season advances, it will fade, as this colour has only been produced by vegetable matter. It is advisable to have plenty of fresh air in your bird room, but be most careful there are no draughts, or you may find them most fatal. Draughts sometimes cause birds to get stuck in the moult; in fact, they are one of the chief causes. If such happens to be the case, remove the bird into a warmer atmosphere, which will in a good many cases restart the moult.

Always give your birds the bath whenever the weather is bright and fine, preferably in the morning, when they have all day before them to get thoroughly dry. You will find that when the bath is freely used it will assist the birds to get through the moult. It is advisable to give your exhibition birds colour food about once a week all through the show season, as they are at all times liable to lose a few feathers, and unless you resort to this you will have them becoming patchy in colour.

Neither Troublesome Nor Expensive.

Some people consider that colour feeding is both a trouble and expense. I don't see that there is much trouble about it. It does not take you more than two or three minutes to mix the food, and not more than an extra five minutes to go round twenty cages. Again, nothing is a trouble to the true fancier; at least, that is my idea. Regarding the expense, it has been estimated that the cost of colour feeding each bird through the moult amounts to the sum of 6d. per bird, so that as far as expense is concerned, that cannot be taken into consideration. It is, I consider, well spent money, even in the case of singing cocks. You can always get 1s. 6d. or 2s. more for a nicely fed bird than for a natural coloured one, especially if your customer happens to be a lady, as colour always takes their eye.

In conclusion, gentlemen, I must thank you for your kind attention, and trust that someone has gained a little information that will prove beneficial.

No. 534.
Combined Seed-blower and Sifter.

Sent by Mr. B. Brett, 62, Cantwell Road, Plumstead, S.E.

I enclose sketch of an inexpensive seed-blower and sifter combined. You first get a ½lb. cocoa or any other tin, and drill two holes, one on each side. When the cone-shaped trumpet and mouth tube are made, you next solder them in (as in illustration). You next proceed to make the sifter, by punching holes all over the bottom of the tin; having done this, you get a lid of another tin, so that it fits tightly over the bottom of the article. The finished thing is very useful for blowing the husks out of the seed, which most birds leave in their bottles.—B. Brett.

No. 535.
A Bullfinch Trap-cage.

Sent by Mr. Jesse Ward, 1, George Street, Markyate, near Dunstable.

Enclosed is a sketch of a trap-cage which I find is very effective in the catching of Bullfinches. All you want is an ordinary trap-cage, then cut out the wires that separate the call bird from the trap at top, not forgetting to leave one wire at each end for the glass to lie on. If cut to fit, there is little chance of your call bird escaping. The next move is to cut out wires in the trap-door, and insert a piece of thin glass, not omitting to put a small piece of rubber for the door to fall against to save glass from breaking. I think this sketch will explain the rest. The glass, if kept clean, looks to the bird as if there is nothing there. Last winter I used one like this, and three others without glass; I caught more birds in it than the other three, and I found it also useful for the call bird when it rained.—Jesse Ward.

Some Notes on the Sedge Warbler.

By JOHN CRAIG (Beith).

The Sedge Warbler is one of our common summer migrants, generally arriving here (Beith) about the beginning of May. The species was scarce about Beith and other places in Scotland in 1909, but I am glad to say there was a slight increase last year, and a still greater increase this year, which brings them up to about their normal number, but they are not yet so numerous as they were thirty years ago.

Mistaken for the Nightingale.

The Sedge Warbler is sometimes mistaken for the Nightingale, both in England and in Scotland, as it often sings at night.

Sedge Warbler's Nest, suspended from reed stems.

Some years ago a bird was heard singing at about 11 p.m. about two miles from Beith; it was said to be a Nightingale. After getting a description from the men who heard it, I told them it was a "Blethering Yam," which is one of the local names for the Sedge Warbler about Beith. But they did not accept my statement. About a fortnight afterwards a gentleman asked me what kind of bird I thought it was. I said it was a "Blethering Yam." He gave me the name of another gentleman who was there and heard it along with the gentlemen above referred to, which I was not aware of, who also said it was a "Blethering Yam." Other birds were heard singing in the district at night, and in other parts of Scotland, which were said to be Nightingales, but they were Sedge Warblers.

This Warbler is partial to streams and watery places, but it is by no means confined to these. The nest is generally built among herbage about a foot or so from the ground, but it is often built in a hedge about six feet from the ground. I saw one on the ground. But they are sometimes suspended and woven on three or four reed-stems or grass as shown in photographs I have sent to the editor which were taken by Mr. Thomas Malloch (Johnstone). He found the nest on July 14th, 1911, near Johnstone. He took some of the photographs on the same day, and the one showing three eggs in the nest on July 22nd, when I was present. These are the first photographs taken for the purpose of showing that the nest of the Sedge Warbler is sometimes interwoven on reed-stems or other herbage, so far as I am aware, which provides a final and permanent settlement of this vexed question.

I have only seen two of these suspended nests before. One was woven on nettle-stems and the other interwoven on the stems of knot or canary grass. The latter was said to be a Reed Warbler's, but there are no Reed Warblers about Beith, and so far as I know they have never bred in Scotland.

Settling the Point.

In 1910, Mr. Malloch paid a visit to Beith to take a photograph of a young Cuckoo. I then asked him if he had ever seen a Sedge Warbler's nest woven on reed-stems or grass. He said he had. I asked him to take a photograph of the first one he found that was woven or fixed to reed-stems, as it was a disputed point. He did so, as shown in the photographs above referred to.

The Rev. C. A. Johns says "The Sedge Warbler's nest is suspended from, rather than built on, its supports." Howard Saunders says "The Sedge Warbler's nest is never suspended like that of the Reed Warbler, but is concealed among the lower branches of a willow, or in the rank herbage by some stream or ditch, or even in a mossy hollow in the ground." And I see by Dr. Butler's book recently published that Mr. Seebohm also asserts that the nest of this bird "is never suspended between reeds like the Reed Warbler's, but is supported by the branches.

The photographs already referred to show that the Sedge Warbler's nest is suspended from a few reed-stems like that of the Reed Warbler.

Dr. Butler made some nasty remarks because I stated some plain facts when criticising Mr. Seebohm's remarks about the young Cuckoo. Mr. Seebohm ridiculed the idea that the young Cuckoo ejected its foster brothers and sisters from the nest, and was supported by Dr. Butler. But now Dr. Butler is criticising him about the Sedge Warbler's nest. I hope to review on an early date Dr. Butler's book "Birds' Eggs of the British Isles," which was recently published. But I must return to the subject.

Food, Eggs and Plumage.

The Sedge Warbler's food consists of worms, insects, and water molluscs. It usually lays five or six eggs, which are a yellowish clay colour, clouded or mottled with a brown shade. But an egg of this species (brought to me for identification) was of a reddish colour.

Upper plumage olive-grey, the centre of each feather tinged with brown, a light mark above each eye, under, yellowish white, more or less tinged with red; throat white; tail rounded, of moderate length, of a uniform ash-brown. Length four and a half inches.

All About the Norwich Plainhead.

A Lecture recently delivered before the Sheffield O.S.

By J. A. T. WOODALL (Sheffield).

A Valuable Tip.

I might here give you another tip which I think will repay you for the little bit of extra trouble it involves. Every night just before the birds go off to roost I mix a small quantity of bread and milk sop. When it is cold I take each nest of young out separately. After they are about two days old, you will know from experience as soon as you take hold of a nest that they will gape for food. I then take a piece of stick, and get as much of the milk sop into each young one as possible, and I see that all their crops are full. You know then that they will be alright till morning. You will find that this brings them on wonderfully, builds up the system and puts size into them. Continue this mode of feeding at nights as long as ever they will gape for food.

I have fed birds for producing both natural and what used to be called "Red Fed" colour; the latter is what we know at the present time as colour feeding. It is really a farce to have classes to read "Natural Colour," as there are no natural colour birds shown to-day. They are all fed in some way or other, either by a yellow pepper, saffron, marigold, nasturtium, or other colouring agent. The Norwich Plainhead Club generally want a natural colour class when allotting their patronage, but as it is the "Red Fed" bird that interests us most, we will give that our attention.

A YOUTHFUL ENTHUSIAST.

The five-year-old son of Mr. Arthur Pearsons (Forest Hill, S.E.), with his two pairs of Canaries and their nests of young—four in each. Since the photograph was taken Master Pearson has had two other nests of four. His father (who has just joined CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE) has also had a good season—42 young birds to date.

Whence Pepper is Obtained.

In the first place let us consider from what source the pepper is obtained, so that we know exactly what we are giving our birds to get this red hot colour—the colour which is so necessary from an exhibitor's point of view. This plate which I will hand round shows you the two principal vegetables used to produce this colouring matter. On the left is a diagram showing vegetable from which sweet or tasteless pepper is obtained. This resembles the tomato plant, and is known as the Genus Capsicum. Capsicums are grown in many parts of the world. Several medical men have proved that this capsicum, or tasteless pepper, as we call it, is perfectly harmless as a bird food. By the kindness of Mr. J. W. Ramsden and of Mr. Sandiford, I am able to show you samples of this and various other colour producing vegetables; also samples of various peppers, all of which contain the colour producing properties so much desired.

We now come to the consideration of the pungent capsicum, described as "Capsicum annuam acuminatum," or what we know as Hot Natal. This you will observe on the right of the diagram. I have also here some sample pods for your inspection, so that you can see exactly the nature of food that produces the colour.

I might point out that all these samples have been gathered now about 5 years, which accounts for their dried state. This Hot Natal, as its name implies, is grown to the best state of perfection in Natal. Some of the more prolific species bear pods of not such a deep colour. These are very often used for yellow feeding. You will observe the difference in the colour of pod. In the production of this colouring matter, the pod or skin is ground up, and the very finest salad or olive oil is added to this. The quantity of oil added is according to the species, age and dryness of the pods before grinding. That pepper is considered the best that contains from 12 to 15 per cent. of oil, the oil naturally producing a gloss upon the plumage. I should not advise you to add any oil, although some fanciers consider it policy to do so, as if your pepper is of too oily a nature, it may have a tendency to produce slackness of feather. Those supplied at the present day by two of, I should say, the largest dealers in colour foods, are, in my opinion, absolutely ready for use, and the two finest foods the world can produce. Of course some prefer one and some another brand, but personally I have used both with equally good results.

Obtaining "Balls of Fire."

We have now considered the production and preparation of pepper. Let us next consider the best means of feeding our stock, to get what is commonly called in show reports "Balls of fire." After the breeding season, I should suggest having a general clean-round. All cages should be thoroughly washed, or limed out; all perches, etc., thoroughly cleansed so that your birds can commence the most trying ordeal of the year under thoroughly healthy conditions. By this cleansing you will also do away with any of those pests you have succeeded in breeding—red mite—as we can all generally manage to breed them, if we cannot breed Canaries.

Now for the moult; as I have previously pointed out, put all the birds you consider good enough for exhibition in separate cages, so that there is no fear of any controversy, which might occur if you had two or three cocks in one cage. The remainder you can moult in flights 10 or 12 in one, or 2 or 3 in a 20 inch breeding cage. Of course, it depends upon the amount of room you have at your disposal.

I should also suggest that you protect your birds from a strong light during the moult. This can be overcome by drawing the blind in your bird-room; or if the room has a roof light, nail some light fabric over the window so as to subdue the light. I have known some fanciers to cover their cages up with paper, and practically keep their birds in darkness. It is advisable also to keep your room if possible at an even temperature. That, of course, applies if you have heating apparatus fitted.

Interior of the Sedge Warbler's Nest.

How to Mix the Food.

We will proceed one step further: Mixing the colour food, which is a very important feature. I go about it as follows: I make my egg-food in the ordinary way, of course using one or two eggs according to the number of birds I am moulting. To one egg and a thick slice of bread I use four teaspoonsful of pepper. To 1lb. of tasteless pepper I have previously added 2oz. of Hot Natal, making sure that this has been evenly and thoroughly mixed. I also add to my egg food a desertspoonful of fine caster sugar, which makes the food much more palatable; and it is more readily eaten by the birds. It is advisable to let it stand for an hour previous to use, so that the colouring matter sets well into the bread, etc.

For conclusion see page 88.

Wild-Bird Life.

Bird Life on the River.

Wild birds (during this exceptionally dry weather), whose habit it is to feed by the waterside, must have a much easier life than those other insectivorous species that hunt the fields and hedgerows for sustenance. The margin of the sea, and banks of rivers and streams, cannot vary much in their supply of live food. If one takes a stretch of a few yards of sand on the edge of the tide, and looks closely for small life, he will soon see that the food supply for waders is plentiful, especially when compared with that of the birds seeking their food in the fields. The writer of these notes has recently visited several of our southern rivers, and naturally the bird life attracted more than passing notice. The numbers of species was not large therefore disappointing. Near the mouths of the rivers, Gulls were of course numerous. Rooks and Jackdaws were fairly plentiful. Further up the stream an occasional Sandpiper darting out from the overhanging bank attracted attention. This bird flies with a curious action, first exposing the under surface of the body, and then the back and wings, as though rolling from side to side; his flight is never of any great length, and generally terminates in some oozy grip in the bank, where the sedge forms secure cover. He is a pretty bird, with a fair quantity of white in his plumage which makes him easily distinguishable among his surroundings. The birds that are the most attractive upon these South Devon rivers are the lordly Herons, conspicuous for their size, length of limbs, erect carriage, and statuesque pose. Most birds do not stand to watch intruders upon their solitude for any length of time, but depart directly they have any suspicion of danger, or commence feeding again. But the Heron is not easily satisfied; he will stand like a statue at the edge of the water, watching carefully every movement. Apparently he is quite motionless, but if keenly examined through a good glass, it will be seen that his head moves gently as he watches a passing boat or wanderer on the opposite bank. At present the rivers and streams are pretty thickly populated with these fine birds, most of which are birds of the year; they have not yet attained the size and richer plumage of maturity. Nor do they feed singly, but may be noted in small groups, or scattered along the banks, sometimes six or eight in quite a limited area.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects. Harmless to everything.

CANARY QUERIES.

What are They?

A Novice, Shropshire.—There is not such a breed of Canary as Moskins; neither do I know of any localism for any variety which you might have mistaken for this name. As for the birds being a cross between Moskins and a Mule, their excellent breeding capabilities are not much in favour of it, even if the Moskins existed under some other term of which I am ignorant. Mules are generally accounted quite sterile, and although I do not go so far as to say a genuine Mule never has and never will prove fertile, I do know that the successful breeding of Mules or half Mules is an exceptionally rare occurrence, whereas your birds have been quite exceptionally fertile, especially if you made no slip when you wrote that they laid 7 (seven) eggs between May 26th and May 29th, of which six were hatched and reared. Your description of the birds does not even apply to the Siskin—a British bird—which is the nearest approach to your term I can think of. It might, however, apply to any green variegated Canary of the Yorkshire or nearly similar type. Is it likely the term Moskins was intended for the name of the "strain," such as a strain of Yorkshires originally bred by some one of this name? Is there no fancier near you whom you could ask to see the birds and settle the douht?

Eradicating Red Mites.

Red Mite.—Details for effecting this object have been given frequently and with various remedies. Paraffin is very good when properly used; the reason you failed with it is perhaps that you attempted to do the work in instalments, or you did not do it thoroughly. You must set about the task and go through it from beginning to end most thoroughly, omitting nothing, not even the rack or walls, where the cages have stood or hung. The petrol remedy given a few weeks ago is an excellent one, and is perfectly safe and harmless carried out, as advised, in the open air and away from lights. Smoking, of course, is prohibited during the operation. But if you don't wish to risk it, try the following:—Dissolve an ounce of camphor in half pint of paraffin (methylated spirits is better, but destroys the varnish on cages); well clean and scrape cages, raking out all cracks or crevices, corners, or open joints with a pin or bristle to dislodge and kill as many mites as possible, and then thoroughly flush out the joints and harbouring places with the prepared fluid, using a small paint brush to work it into the joints, and paint it liberally all over cages inside and out. Stand in sun to dry. In a few hours, or next day, if cages are not urgently needed, repeat the operation, and once again after this. Then when dry wash them out with warm water in each pint of which add a teaspoonful of Jeyes' or Izal. When again dry, repaint, enamel, or varnish insides or out, as may be necessary. Treat all staging or shelves the same way, and give walls a good rub down a few times whilst cages are being dealt with. Pay strict attention to any scraps of loose paper, nails, or nail-holes about the wall.

Starting at Bottom.

C. H.—As you must of necessity start at the bottom of the ladder and endeavour to work up a strain of good crests by breeding you cannot do better than get Part XIII. of "Our Canaries" and thoroughly digest the advice of our best breeders on this point. It is quite impossible to go into all details on such a question in these replies. Briefly, get the best birds you can afford, and avoid as far as possible those with bad physical defects: split crests, large open centres, bald patches at back, horns, and pinched narrow skulls. Select smaller, neat, and well-proportioned heads and crests in preference to larger ones having these faults. If you can get three pairs to start, choose as follows. No. 1 pair: Buff Crest-bred cock, with short, stout beak, wide forehead and broad skull, and as long and broad in head-feather as possible, and well browed; and a self or broken yellow-green Crest hen, with short beak, as much crest as possible, but neat and shapely, and with small centre. No. 2 pair: Buff Crest cock, neat and well shaped crest, well filled in at back, and a buff Crest-bred hen with head-points similar to hen of No. 1 pair. Both, or at any rate one, of this pair should be bred in the ordinary way from yellow and buff. No. 3 pair: Buff variegated Crest hen with neat well-finished crest, small centre, evenly radiated and well filled-in back. In this bird shape and radiation of crest is of more importance than size. Mate with a yellow Lancashire coppy cock of fair substance, good headgear and short wings and tail. In the following season mate the young of No. 3 pair with the progeny of Nos. 1 and 2, strictly weeding out all those with such faults as mentioned above, and retaining for further breeding only those which show a fair advance in general type and quality. From this stage you will learn from "Our Canaries" how to proceed. If you can only afford two pairs to start get Nos. 1 and 3, and omit No. 2 pair, and proceed as before named, but in the second year double-huff about one-half of your stock. I note your remarks re Septic Fever. I am well aware that some persons, generally such as are woefully ignorant of all scientific knowledge, profess to be able to cure it with medicines. Nevertheless, when I say it is incurable I am on the side of the best medical opinion of the day, and of men who have scientifically investigated the disease in all stages and know what they are talking about.

A Bad Case.

G. Wilson.—I cannot hold out much hope of your doing much. You can but try all that is possible. First thoroughly overhaul cage, removing bird to a temporary one meanwhile. If the insects are red mites you will find them harboured in the cage, chiefly active at night, and of a dark red colour. See reply to "Red Mite" in this issue to deal with them. If they are grey lice, they will be living upon the bird, and if you catch the bird, you will soon find them running all over your hand. They are a grey colour. See reply to "J.W.H.," on Aug. 5th, to deal with this pest. Keep cage well strewn with clean gritty sand, in a comfortable and fairly equable place, well-aired, but quite free from draughts or fumes of burning lights in the evenings. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day for a fortnight give a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and sprinkled with maw seed, and twice a week on the alternating days give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, black rape, millet, and broken groats. On each of the remaining days give a little green food or morsel of banana. In the drinking water give 20 drops of whisky, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and half as much chlorate of potash every second day for a week. Then leave out the salts, and add five drops each of oxymel of squills and syrup of Tolu, and two drops of eucalyptus oil; shake well together, and continue this every second day for another fortnight. Anoint the bare skin with lanocyllin three times a week. Report progress at end of this treatment referring to this reply, and I will advise further if necessary.

Young Belgians (Nimrod).—The cause of the young birds having dark feathers on the head is the presence of dark blood in one or both of the parents. It is quite possible for this to be the case, even though there is not the slightest trace of dark colour on the surface of the plumage, but considering the position of colour, and its appearance on most of the young bred, you would probably find its presence indicated in the old birds by dark flue about the thighs and vent if you caught them and blew up the feathers, and might also find dark flue about the neck or even microscopic ticks of dark colour on the head, neck, or shoulders. This colour is no great drawback if the birds are otherwise of good type and quality.

Pests or Moulting? (Sandburst).—You should examine the birds and cages carefully to be sure whether insect pests are really troublesome. I say this because I think it is probable there may be nothing wrong except that the birds may be moulting. Are there any loose feathers flying about? If you discover grey lice on the birds treat as advised to "J.W.H." on Aug. 5th, and if red mites are found troublesome treat as advised to "Red Mite" in this issue. Allow the birds to bathe freely and add a few drops of quassia extract to the water twice a week. If the birds are only moulting feed liberally, keep free from draughts, give a little egg food two or three times a week, and add 20 drops of chemical food to the water twice a week, which should be all the treatment that is necessary.

Seeds and Training for Roller (Olive Grove).—A staple mixture of two parts canary to one part German summer rape is best for these birds. A pinch of mixed seeds once a week and a little egg food or bread and milk once or twice a week, and green food three or four times a week. For training you should cage him alone and keep him within hearing of a good, free singing Roller, and banish all other birds or birdy sounds beyond earshot until the song of the youngster is established. Keep a light cover over his cage to keep him quiet and concentrate his attention upon the song of the tutor, and prevent him getting too loud and violent in song. Remove cover for an hour or two daily to encourage him to practise singing. Get the Nutshell booklet on "The Roller," 2½d. post free, which will give you more detailed information.

Bare on Back. (Peter).—These birds are either moulting, or plucking each other. In the first case you should find plenty of loose feathers in the cages, and in the latter case careful watching should reveal the culprit or culprits, which will probably be the best feathered birds in the group, and they should be removed and caged alone until the moult is over. The black ticks in the flesh have doubtless developed into miniature feathers by this time. Slightly smear bare places twice a week with sulphur ointment until feathers burst the quills. Unless you are colour feeding do not give egg food daily. Give a staple of plain canary seed only. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of egg food per bird, or an equivalent quantity of bread and milk. On the alternate days give twice a week a third of a teaspoonful of maw seed per bird, and three times a week half a teaspoonful of dry summer rape. Give a little green food three times a week. Limit the diet to this. In the drinking water give a pinch of Epsom salts and six drops of lemon juice for one day only.

Leg Weakness (Miss L. M. Nicholls).—See that the bird has well-fitting, firmly fixed perches of a proper size for its feet, and made of nice soft pine. For once catch the bird, and well wash feet in warm water, then immerse them for a minute or two in a saucer of cold water, in which you have dissolved a little common salt. Dry carefully, and paint feet with a feather dipped in Friar's Balsam. For the rest feed and treat the bird as advised to "W.J.S." for at least a month.

Scotch Fancies (Puzzled T. F.).—(1) The only advantage you could get by plucking the tails of your young Scotch Fancies would be an extra eighth of an inch or so in length, which could only turn the scale in their favour in very close competition. From a moral standpoint there cannot be two opinions, it should not be done; therefore I do not advise it. (2) It is impossible to say what is wrong with the bird which sits with its head turned the wrong way. She might possibly have received some kind of injury which set up paralysis of the nerves controlling some particular muscles. Keep her in an equable temperature, feed liberally, and then aim at getting her through a quick good moult. At the latter end of it give 20 drops of Fellow's syrup in the water three times a week for a month, when she may possibly recover her normal condition.

Raw Under Wings (W.F.).—Do I understand you correctly that you forcibly bathe the bird? If so, stop it at once. Offer the bath daily for half an hour, and if it does not bathe voluntarily in that time, let it go without. Twice a week for a time add a few quassia chips or drops of extract of quassia to the bath. It is quite likely that red mites are the cause of the trouble, and perhaps when you overhauled the cage you neglected to pay attention to the wall and nail on which it hangs. See reply to "Red Mite" for eradication. Treat the bird generally as advised to "W.F.Y." for a fortnight, but instead of the saffron in the water substitute as much chlorate of potash as will cover a threepennypiece in addition to the whisky. You say the bird does not like rape, yet the red-brown seed you say it prefers in the seed mixtures is doubtless summer rape.

Norwich and Roller (Mathematics).—(1) It is probable that the temperature of the bedroom was more fluctuating, and perhaps much lower, than the position the bird had previously occupied, which would account for her going off in condition. See reply to "W.F.Y.," and treat her as therein advised. For the watery excrement see that all your seeds, foods, vessels, and water supply are perfectly sound, sweet, and pure. Keep cages and perches scrupulously clean. Instead of the buckthorn advised in other reply give six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for two days. After this give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid for three or four days. Give no green food, but a morsel of ripe banana instead. (2) It is quite possible the Roller hen will breed quite normally with a Roller cock next season. At any rate, it is worth giving her a trial. Mate her with a vigorous early hatched 1911 cock in high condition and song.

Diarrhoea (Edina).—Examine your hemp and rape to see if they are of good sound quality, and the latter free from infestation by tiny greyish mites. Keep the perches quite clean, and withhold green food until the looseness is quite stopped, substituting for it a morsel of ripe banana three times a week. In addition to the staple seed diet give half a teaspoonful of plain dry biscuit, crushed (arrowroot for preference) every second day, and on the alternate days a third of a teaspoonful of maw. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, for one day, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid for two of three days. If this has not the desired effect remove the water for an hour or two morning and afternoon, and when returning it add half a teaspoonful of chalk mixture, obtainable from any chemist's, well shaken up, so that the birds may drink before the chalk settles to the bottom of the vessel. This may be exchanged again for plain water an hour later.

Protracted Moulting (W.F.Y.).—You cannot expect him to do much until the present moulting season is over, which you must take advantage of to bring him into a normal condition. Watch for the first dropping of tail and flight feathers. Then keep the bird indoors and cover the cage over, keeping it in an equable and fairly warm place, and free from draughts until the moult is quite finished. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on the alternating days for a month give a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake sprinkled with maw seed, and each time you give this for the first fortnight slightly dust it with flowers of sulphur. Continue giving green food, and allow bird to bathe freely. In the drinking water for a week give six drops of syrup of buckthorn every second day, and in the following week 20 drops of whisky and ten or a dozen blades of saffron every second day. Keep on this simple dietary whilst moulting, and when moult is nearly finished give 20 drops of chemical food in the water three times a week, and a little crushed sponge cake in which you have well mixed two or three fat minced mealworms three times a week for two or three weeks.

Dealers' Prices, etc. (W. Wood).—No, I cannot tell you the average price dealers give for Canaries. In buying up a surplus stock I imagine they would offer a lump sum for the lot after inspection, and I doubt whether you obtain more than a trivial sum per head if, as you seem to suggest, you picked out all the decent birds yourself and set apart only the wasters to dispose of in one lot. If you study the advertised prices dealers are willing to sell at, and then remember that they have to allow a certain amount for business and advertising expenses, feeding, and probable losses and depreciation of stock, and yet make a sufficient profit to live themselves, you should have a fair idea what they are likely to give for stock. Your best plan is undoubtedly to dispose of all obvious wasters locally, the cocks at songster prices, and the hens as feeders, or to mule breeders at any reasonable price, as soon as you can be sure of the sex. Otherwise, if you sell them to dealers for convenience, you must be prepared, I fear, to accept a small price per head, or, which would amount practically to the same thing, sell the good birds together with wasters in one lot. (2) This is rather too big a subject to go into here. Wool is not in our line, and as regards birds, I fancy you have got hold of an idea which you are endeavouring to apply in a wrong direction. You may depend upon it if North country birds excel London bred ones, it is invariable due to the breeding of them, and not, as you infer, to "the iron in the air." (3) See Editor's replies.

A Guarantee (Disappointed).—I am afraid you can do nothing but exercise patience and hope for better luck next year. As I read your letter, the dealer did not guarantee the birds to breed within any specified time, and even had he done so, with only a verbal agreement to depend on, I doubt whether it would have been worth your while seeking legal redress. As a rule, such so-called guarantees should be looked upon as so much cheap clap-trap. I doubt whether any respectable dealer of standing would give them.

Construction of Aviary (Percival). — Unless the structure is thoroughly well sheltered by other buildings, so as to be in a fairly cosy spot, it will certainly be very susceptible to atmospheric changes, with only 5-8ths in. matchboards. Unless sheltered, as suggested, on the East, and also to some extent on the West, as well as the North, I would advise you to line it on the inner side of the frame-work with thinner boards, and fill in the space between the two walls with sawdust or wool waste. This will not only thoroughly prevent draughts, but make the whole structure very cosy, and but little subject to variation owing to ordinary external changes. Do not forget proper ventilation, which Mr. Norman's hook will tell you how to carry out. Glad to hear you have found CAGE BIRDS such a valuable guide.

A Gift Horse (Music Lover).—You know you must not look this animal in the mouth. Still, there is nothing in your letter to indicate with certainty that the birds are all hens, but there is just one little point which may possibly—I do not say, certainly—go to prove the contrary. For instance, had they all been hens, and acted as yours have done, the probability is you would have had two abnormally large clutches of eggs instead of two quite normal ones. They were quite old enough for the cocks to be in full song when you had them, but if they were already mated that might account for their silence. Could you not get some experienced fancier to look at them? They will not sing now until after the moult. Cage the two supposed cocks separately, and the hens together in one cage, and treat all as advised to "W.F.Y." This should bring through a good moult, and then you should gradually remove the covers from the cages, when the cocks should soon come in song. You must not put the pairs together again until next spring.

Nesting and Plucked Young (W.J.S.).—(1) It is just possible you may get something from the clutch just commencing incubation, but the chances are rather against it, and in any case I would not have allowed the hen to nest again. Remove the cock and leave the hen to sit and rear young, if any, by herself. If she drops into moult she will doubtless desert eggs or young as the case may be. If the latter you must resort to hand-feeding to save them. (2) The young hen will never regain the loss of frame and substance which has resulted from the plucking, but she may become quite strong, healthy, and well-feathered. Do not crush canary seed, give it whole, and an unlimited supply as staple. Give a pinch of summer rape every second day, and on the alternate days three times a week half a teaspoonful of egg-food, crushed sponge cake, or an equivalent amount of bread and milk, in which mix three drops of cod liver oil emulsion each time for a month. On two other days each week give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, linseed, black rape, teazle, millet, and broken groats. Give a little green food three times a week, and allow a fair amount of space for exercise.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

An Ailing Grey Parrot.

Parrot Friend, R.S.O.—Get as much powdered areca nut as will lie level on a sixpence, mix into a couple of pellets with a little syrup, and give to the bird—give three or four doses at intervals of three days each. Follow this by a course of Allen and Hanbury's Hypophosphates in the drinking water, keeping the bowels moving freely by occasional doses of Dinneford's magnesia—5 drops direct to mouth, or 1 teaspoonful in one ounce of water—this to form the day's supply of drinking water. Diet:— Seed mixture: ripe fruit ad lib., nuts, plain biscuit, cuttle-bone and grit. If the bird does not bathe, it should be sprayed twice weekly with a fine sprayer during the summer months, and as weather permits during the winter. Our Nutshell booklet, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free from our Manager, would assist you as to general treatment.

Moustache Parrakeet.

E. Peel.—Yes, your bird is a Moustache Parrakeet, not a species easily tamed in a cage, but kindness and quietness will overcome its wildness and fearsomeness, though they are more suitable for aviary than a cage, still I have seen many nice steady cage specimens. In a cage the single bird is best, but in a fairly roomy aviary, giving the accommodation usually given to poultry, a pair would in due course settle down and breed. Give it a seed mixture of canary and white millet in equal parts, and supply a little hemp, sunflower, and oats two or three times a week—also supply any kind of ripe fruit it will take (it can have a few sultanas and grocer's nuts that have been first moistened and cleaned in boiling water), nuts, and plain biscuits. Add a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply of seed, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone hanging in the cage. You must get rid of the ants under the coop. The plumage will not be renewed till the moult. I can only counsel patience as to the taming process; keep it in your midst, but be steady and quiet in its vicinity, and when attending to its needs. Study its likes and dislikes in the way of food, and get it accustomed to taking from your fingers anything it is very fond of, but it will be a work of time.

Seven Queries.

Aviculturist.—(1) Matters will right themselves another season. Your bird, in spite of appearances, was a bit "off colour"—such instances are by no means uncommon. Instances of the Combassou even attempting to breed are rare indeed. (2) The Bengalese is a cock bird. (3) The Bronze Mannikin was undoubtedly affected by the heat; there have been many losses therefrom. As regards the earlier case, I can say nothing; the next case you get of this kind send body to our P.M. expert for examination. Birds are best caged separately when drugs are necessary, and in an ailing bird the bowels should be kept moving freely, but not really loose. (4): Yes, but the situation is further complicated by the age question; the distinction you quote only holds good when comparing adult birds. (5) Pink-cheeked, Crimson, and Red-eared, Common and Grey Waxbills are cognomens, which all refer to the same bird. (6) Paradise and Queen (racket-tailed) are safe, but the Pintailed is certainly dangerous, and other species very doubtful. (7) Instances of their breeding in captivity are very rare indeed, but in roomy natural quarters there is a prospect of their doing so.

British and Foreign Finches.

H. M. P.—Yes, but you must note that Chaffinches, Yellow Buntings, and Greenfinches are not safe in a mixed series, though with these, as with all other species, there is a considerable amount of individualism. You can keep the small Ornamental Finches, Singing Finches, Grassfinches, Manuikins, and Waxbills together with British Goldfinches, Bullfinches, Redpolls, Linnets, Twites, Siskins, and Canaries, together in numbers commensurate with the capacity of the aviary. You can also keep them out of doors all the year round, providing the aviary has a roomy flight and a roomy well-lighted (birds will not use a dark shelter) shed. All glass must be covered with netting in the inside. Half-inch mesh wire netting will be required to confine the above birds. If you send a rough sketch of your aviary, with size, etc., I can then say what species and how many are likely to succeed with you. Birds that are to be left out all the winter should be turned out not later than the middle of June.

Grey Losing Feathers.

J. D.—The hot weather has encouraged and rather prolonged the moult with some Parrots, but it rather looks as if your bird was pulling out some of its plumage. I should give it one dose of Dinneford's Magnesia weekly for a couple of months—one teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water, this to form the day's drinking supply. Also spray (use a mist sprayer) the bird twice weekly with quassia solution and anoint all bare places with Spratts' "Pennakura" every other day. Also lightly colour its drinking water (when not giving the magnesia) with chemical food. It will be necessary to persevere with the above treatment. Diet: Seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, and plain biscuit. Keep a piece of clean cuttlebone hanging in the cage, and add a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply of seed mixture. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. If symptoms should become aggravated, write at once with fullest details, also stating how it has been fed and treated generally; otherwise report progress in six or eight weeks. Our Nutshell booklet, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free from our manager, should help you.

Blue-fronted Amazon.

Ignorant.—Most certainly, let it have boiled maize regularly, but it should have seed as well; get a mixture of two parts each of Canary and white millet and one part each of wheat, maize, dari, hemp, and sunflower seeds, well mix, and keep a supply in the cage. It will ultimately eat freely of this as well as the boiled maize. Also supply ripe fruit, nuts, and plain biscuit; this will about meet its needs. Keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in its cage, and add a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply of seed. You had better accustom it to water gradually; let it have a good drink three times daily, and after about a month the water can be left in the cage altogether. Once a week put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the daily supply of water for, say, about a month. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. As soon as the bird is tame, keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, and it will soon begin to mimic sounds and pick up words. Also when it is quiet and restful teach it, by constant repetition of words and short phrases. Screeching usually is started by fear, so avoid anything likely to scare or irritate it till it is thoroughly accustomed to you.

Birds for Aviary.

W. S.—You do not tell me in which direction your fancy lies—Parrakeets or Finch-like birds. Again, it is late, especially for a Northern county, to turn out birds and leave them out all the winter; they should be put out by mid-June latest for this purpose. If you buy newly imported birds now and put them out, the cold weather will be upon them before they are acclimatised, and many losses will be the result. Cannot you discover some aviary fairly near to you and purchase some of the surplus birds. If you cannot do this, you will have to defer stocking till the spring. If you want Parrakeets, you must repeat query. You can keep any of the following: Zebra, Ribbon, Spice, and Sharp-tailed Finches, Long-tailed Greenfinches, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Bronze and Magpie Mannikins, Bengalese, Silverbills, Java Sparrows, Common and Golden-breasted Waxbills; Avadavats, also a pair of small Quails and Diamond Doves, or some other small species. "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1s. 2d. post free from our manager, would tell you how to treat all these and other similar species.

Keeping Birds in Cages.

Lovebird.—You have, I can see, an entire misconception of the accommodating capacity of cages—a cage six by one foot has only a floor area of six feet, and consequently accommodation for six birds the size of a Norwich Canary, and in such cages it is merely inviting disaster to mix Budgerigars and Finches. In the cage 6 ft. by 1 ft. put in half a dozen pairs of Waxbills, and hang up some rush and cocoanut shell nests, and some may possibly breed—use twiggy branches to screen the nests, and for perches—Golden-breasted, Grey, St. Helena, and Orange-cheeked Waxbills, with Common Avadavats and Zebra Finches; one pair of each would make you a very handsome and interesting series. Our Nutshell Booklet, "Waxbills," 2½d. post free from our manager, would give you full details of treatment. In the cage 3 ft. by 1 ft. you could keep two pairs of Budgerigars, and they should breed, but you would have to part with the young as soon as they were able to fend for themselves. If you want Cockatiels you must let a pair have it to themselves, but a cage one foot broad does not give them much of a chance to stretch their wings. The Nutshell booklet, "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free from our manager, will tell you how to treat in cage or aviary.

Pintail Nonpariels, etc.

E. R. F.—(1) Canary, white and spray millet, a few white oats, and a little paddy rice, with green food, grit, cuttlebone, and if they care for them an occasional mealworm or other insect. (2) The difficulty with these birds is that, though apparently looking very fit, they are in a very debilitated condition on arrival, but once over the critical period of the first few weeks in this country, they should safely winter out of doors with the precautious you name; but as the season is getting late, and they will be barely acclimatised by the time cold weather is on us, for this winter they had better go indoors—a roomy cage in any living room will suffice. (3) They have not yet been bred in captivity. (4) The arrangements and fittings of your aviary should encourage them to breed, but, in addition to the bushes, fix boxes, husks, Hartz travelling cages round back and under roof of aviary, and screen them with twiggy branches. Note: I should certainly give the aviary the shutter protection you mention.

Blue Mountain Lorikeets (H.B.J.).—The incubation period is about 21 days. If the eggs hatch out, kindly let us know exact period of incubation in your case.

What Birds? (T. C. Wilson).—Your birds are evidently Grey-headed (Madagascar) Lovebirds, and if both have grey or "cream" coloured heads they are both cocks, the hen of this species being an all green bird, while the cock bird has the head and neck pale grey. These birds will thrive well enough on a seed mixture of canary and white millet seed, with a few crushed oats occasionally as a change, also green food, such as fresh lettuce, grass in flower, green oats, etc. The cage bottom should be covered with gritty sand and a piece of clean cuttlebone be kept hanging in the cage.

Young Zebra Finches (Nimrod).—It is very difficult to assign any period, as the mate parent usually still continues to feed the young while the hen is incubating another clutch. Unless you have the birds in a cage, or very small aviary, there is no need to remove the young. In a roomy aviary they need not be removed. The only reliable guide is to keep the young under observation, and to remove them when you see them picking up and cracking seed freely for themselves. Young Zebra Finches will importune the adult birds for food long after they are able to fend for themselves. They can be moved at any period of the day, but for myself I prefer the early morning.

Not Talking (J. Walton).—Our Nutshell booklet, the "Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free from our Manager, would greatly assist you in the treatment of your bird. I much suspect it is "the little bits of things at meals" that is responsible for the mischief. Keep its bowels moving freely, not loose, by occasional doses of Dinneford's magnesia—one teaspoonful in one ounce of water; this to form the drinking water for the day. When not giving the magnesia, add 20 drops of Allen and Hanbury's Hypophosphates to the daily supply of drinking water. Diet:—Seed mixture: two parts each of canary and white millet seeds, and one part each wheat, oats, dari, paddy rice, hemp, and sunflower seeds—well mix and keep a supply in the cage. Ripe fruit ad lib., plain biscuit, and a few nuts. Add a pinch of grit (not sand) to the daily supply of seed mixture, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in the cage.

Budgerigar Aviary (New Beginner).—I prefer the arrangement which will leave the aviary 10ft. long, 6ft. from back to front, and 5½ft. high. The back and end (N.E. and W.) to be boarded and felted. As regards the roof, the back, three feet of the whole length of the aviary should be boarded and felted, as also should two feet at one end of the front of aviary, the remaining portion of roof and front to be covered with half-inch mesh wire, netting. Herein you could keep three pairs Budgerigars, one pair each Madagascar and Blue-winged Lovebirds, and one pair Cockatiels. All the above birds would safely winter out of doors, providing the aviary is suitably furnished with small barrels, husks, or logs. The portion of floor under open netting to be sown with grass and cereals, the remaining area covered with gritty sand. If all is not clear, "New Beginner" had better send me a stamped addressed envelope per the Editor, and I will send him a diagrammatic plan.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Mating and Moulting.

Avis.—I do not think it of any use running either of the Goldfinches with the hen Bullie now. It is too late; further, the hen would be unlikely to rear the young, if any resulted. You could moult the hen with the Goldies, if she would agree with them, though it is true that I prefer Bullie to have very little hemp seed as a regular thing. Still, sometimes circumstances compel one to honour a rule more in the breach than in the observance. If you cannot manage otherwise, then the hemp seed can be risked. It is impossible for colour food to cause Canaries to lose their plumage. This very hot spell of weather is causing birds to moult exceptionally freely and quickly. Further, it is responsible for a regular plague of red mites and other bird pests, and the latter are likely causes of plumage troubles. You must be careful to keep them down to a minimum, and let the birds bathe freely.

Getting Light Muling Hens.

Beginner.—You want to work up a strain for light Mule breeding. Well, it is not easy to get big, well-built hens likely to throw light Mules, unless you know a place where you can get clear-bred Norwich Plainheads (free as possible from green blood). You should obtain a yellow Norwich cock and a buff Lancashire Plainhead hen as one pair; a buff pink-eyed Yorkshire cock (a stock bird, on the heavy side) and a yellow Norwich hen as a second pair. The young from these pairs (and the old birds, too, if desirable) should be mated afterwards to secure the best results as regards large, well-built hens, as free as possible from markings. The original stock birds should be clears, and bred from clears as far back as possible, with bold, broad heads, and plenty of "timber" generally. They will cost a decent sum, if really good in these respects. When mating up after the first year, avoid breeding with birds which have come small, or thin in head, or heavily marked (a tick, or small mark, doesn't matter), and utilise the yellow Norwich type youngsters for preference. You are pretty certain to breed a pink-eyed yellow hen from pair No. 2, and she should be paired back to her father; take care of any suitable pink-eyed yellow cocks which come from this union, and cross one or other of them into the progeny of pair No. 1. Test the hens, of course, with suitable muling Finches from time to time; and stick to those which may throw Mules with light plumage.

Identity of Bird (Yorky).—The bird you describe is the Tree Creeper, a delicate insectivorous species. Probably it would be a young bird that you picked up.

A Trio (Novice).—(1) The Goldfinch will be much better if kept by himself. Goldies, as a rule, do not care about "companions" in their cages, either of their own species or otherwise. (2) I have never found the smell of "red mite solution" (turps and paraffin mixed) have any ill-effects upon birds, and I use it freely. (3) Personally, I always have cages made of wood.

Biscuit Meals (Back-yarder).—The three samples you send are not really biscuit meals, but a combination of broken biscuit and dried meat. All would be useful for the coarser feeding insectivorous birds—the finer-ground for Larks, Pipits, etc., the medium for Thrushes, Blackbirds, etc., and the coarse for Magpies, Jays, and the like. They seem good value for the price.

A Hen Bullie (Bald Pate).—The plumage will come right at the moult, which should now be very close at hand. I do not advise you to give more than four or five light dressings of the ointment (this, however, is good). You could steep a shred or two of meadow saffron (obtainable from most chemists) in her drinking water, fresh daily.

Losses of Birds (Troubled One).—I really cannot pretend to tell you why your birds have been, and are now, going wrong in the way you describe. It looks as though you have either an infectious disease amongst the stock, or that they are contracting ptomaine poisoning (bad seed, etc). You must send a body at once to our Mr. Yates (see post-mortem rules), and let him tell you the exact nature of the trouble, and advise you what to do. Don't delay.

Identity of Birds (Cork).—The bodies you forwarded were in an awful state when they reached me—the stench would have sent a pig into a faint. Weather like this, only prepared skins should be posted, especially with a Sunday to cause delay in delivery. After plugging my nostrils with carbolic, I held the opened box at arm's length, when one of the birds (whitish under, olive-brown above) I made out to be a Garden Warbler, and the other (greenish-yellow) a Willow Warbler. The former is rare, I believe, in Ireland; found only in three or four districts. Cork being one of these.

A Muling Matter (J. Phillips).—If the very light youngster which you describe is really a Goldfinch Mule, and a cock bird, of good size and shape, then it is of some value. It is impossible to decide these things, however, without seeing the bird. Don't you know some reliable experienced breeder, whose opinion you could ask? Or I will give you my opinion if you care to arrange to send the bird some time to CAGE BIRDS offices for me to look at. If the bird is a light Mule, then by all means put up the parents again next season. It is unusual for Mules, however, to linger in the nest (they generally hop out at a very early age) in the way that young Canaries generally do.

A Linnet Matter (White Wings).—You do not mention the giving of any green food, and a continuous diet of dry seed would set up the condition you describe, especially if the birds get constipated, which is usually the case. Seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed, flowering groundsel, etc., should regularly be given—not necessarily in large quantities, but a little and often. Rape seedlings are invaluable for winter use. If any other Linnets go off in condition, give for two or three days half a teaspoonful (not more) of syrup of buckthorn in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water (fresh daily). Give a teaspoonful of the following seed mixture twice a week: gold of pleasure, plantain, white lettuce, sesame, dandelion, thistle, and maw, one ounce of each. Glad to hear my previous advice proved of value to you.

Moulting a Linnet (W.A.R.).—There is no reason why a Linnet should die simply because it is going into the moult. The latter is a somewhat trying period, of course, but more particularly so for birds constitutionally unsound. My own Linnets I seldom have trouble with. They are turned into good-sized flight cages, allowed to bathe freely (whenever they choose, this weather), and are fed a little more liberally than usual. That is to say, I give in addition to the ordinary seed mixture, some good sound hemp-seed frequently, and cracked sunflower and safflower, with the "wild-seed mixture" advised "White Wings" this week, and ripe seeding shepherd's purse, plantain, groundsel, chickweed, thistle, and hard-heads, etc. Treated as above, my Linnets moult very nicely indeed.

A Linnet "Mystery" (F.L.M.).—I do not think there is any "mystery" about it. For instance, a Linnet worth pounds as a song (contest) bird, might not be worth a cent. for exhibition purposes. You are wrong, too, in saying that "all Linnets are marked like each other." This is not the case—not by long chalks, as the poet says. Many cocks haven't got a line of "pencilling" on them. Three sorts could be chosen in this way: (1) For contest singing, a bird which freely utters "good song" (i.e., the turns recognised by singing fanciers), as free as possible from blemish—his shape, colour, and markings do not matter; (2) for show, a big, well-proportioned bird of Norwich type, rich and sound (particularly on throat and breast) in colour, well marked all over, and showing the whites well in wings and tail; (3) for muling, a similar bird in size and build, which, however, need not necessarily be well marked, but must be of a rich, nutty colour, sound all over—in other words, a big, bold Jonque Linnet. How's that for an explanation of the mystery?

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Preventing Seed Litter (W. Mack).—This has been dealt with previously.

A Plate of Yorkshires (W. Wood).—We have a few copies of this plate in stock, price 2d. post free.

Club Notices (J. Cope; G. Lingard; W. O. Brooke; J. Kerr).—Your notices of meetings were posted too late to reach us in time for insertion in the issue of the same week.

A Photograph (W. Grewar).—Thanks; will try to utilise this in one of our special numbers. It is hardly suited to our ordinary issues.

A Letter of Thanks (Mrs. Bax).—We are most pleased to have been of assistance to you.

News Cuttings (A. W. Fulwood; T. Jarvis; A. S. P.; and others).—Many thanks for your kindness in sending the cuttings from newspapers.

A Seed-Lifter (C. L. Davidson).—Have utilised a similar notion already.

Book on British Birds (Runcorn).—The book you require is the "British Bird Manual," by H. Norman, a copy of which we shall be pleased to send you post free on receipt of 2/3. Kindly forward us your full name and address, when we will send you the other books you have ordered.

Two Items (L. A. Knight).—(1) It is not rare for Goldfinches to nest in confinement, but it very often happens that the young fail to get reared, dying (usually through the parents ceasing to feed) when about a week old. (2) The discussion on this matter is continued in this issue.

Dealing in Foreign Birds (Love Bird).—We consider it is quite possible for you to make money in the manner you indicate—much, of course, depends upon your own perseverance and upon the skill with which you keep the birds. If you consult our advertisement columns you will note that several firms of importers offer to supply foreign birds at wholesale prices. Your best plan, of course, would be to visit them, state exactly what you want, and make the best terms you can for a regular supply. If you cannot manage this, you could no doubt arrange the matter through the post.

The Sex Problem.

Sir,—The method of sexing Canaries described in the poem published in last week's issue, may be all right, but in my time there was a somewhat easier proceeding which was at least as effectual. Place a piece of sugar between the bars. If he takes it, it's a "he," and if she takes it, it's a "she." Quite simple, isn't it?

The City of Glasgow O.A.

Sir,—In the recent correspondence in the Fancy Press in connection with the above association the name of Campbell has been freely mentioned, and as this may lead to misunderstanding, I should feel obliged if you would give publicity to my disclaimer. I have been a member and exhibitor for a period of twenty years, and I have never had, nor shall have, any association or connection with the persons concerned in this disgraceful affair.

The Curious Case of a Young Canary.

Sir,—In answer to "A. J. B." in issue of July 22nd, re bird which sleeps with its head hanging down instead of under its wing, last year I had a young Yorkshire with a similar complaint, and was fortunate enough to win a first with it at Birmingham Nest Feather Show whilst so afflicted. She—it turned out to be a hen—is all right in appearance now, having got rid of her trouble during the moult. This year she laid three rounds of eggs, but did not attempt to sit any of them. The eggs, however, proved to be fertile, and all the youngsters reared from them are in excellent condition, one having won first at Birkenhead N.F. Show in a class of thirteen this month.

J. C. CAINE.

A Norwich Plainhead at Hawarden Show.

Sir,—Please insert the following in CAGE BIRDS. Will Mr. Johnson, or the persons who, he alleges, saw me buy the bird which took first prize in Hawarden Show (Norwich class) in Chester on Saturday night (or any other time) please communicate with me, or through CAGE BIRDS? Mr. Johnson, I understand, has used this assertion, coupling the name of a Mr. Pritchard, who, he alleges, knew something of the bird, which in his opinion won unfairly, and is of a shady character. Such words, I understand, were used in Northop Hall Show. These assertions I strongly deny, and can prove the parentage of the birds to anyone who disbelieves my statement. If my information is correct, I consider an apology is due from Mr. Johnson.

The Rearing of Young Skylarks

Sir,—I have been a lover of the Larks ever since I knew what Larks were, and I have reared all my own birds. Now, to rear these birds as they should be reared you must first of all get a fairly large run cage, so that when they are able to run about a little you can train them to come to the end for feed. Take these birds when they are from 7 to 9 days old, as they will gape better. First put them into an old hat, and when they are able to jump out, put them into the run cage. Do not forget to put in the cage some grass or clover clogs, as rearing them too much on dry hay causes them to have cramp. For feeding these birds, first of all get a coffee mill, then grind some split peas up to a fine powder, also some wheat (grind that up also). Then get some leaf lard, render it and take away the scrapy bits; then let the lard go cold. When you have done this, get about half-a-pound of the ground peas and add about two handfuls of the ground wheat. Do not forget to sift away the shells of the wheat. Then mix these together, and put in some of your lard; rub it in well with your hands. Then get two fresh eggs; beat them well up together, and add a little sugar. Put the meal into the egg, and stir up to a thick paste. Spread this out on to a cake tin, and put it in the oven. Let it stop there till it is nice and brown, but mind you do not burn it. Make your cake half-inch thick. When the cake is cooked I call it egg cake. Egg that has been boiled for 20 minutes is no good for us, much less for birds. Take a little of the cake, roll it with a rolling pin, and add to it some Spratt's Lark food, one Osborne biscuit, a little hemp seed, which has been rolled on the floor with a piece of a square flag-stone. Put the seed into a dish and blow away all the husk or shell from the kernel; keep shaking them up, and you will soon get the kernel as clear as rice. Roll this over with the rolling-pin, and you will have it as fine as your egg cake. Then mix the lot together, ½ egg cake and the other ½ made up of Spratt's Lark Food, Osborne biscuit, and hemp seed; boil to a thin paste on the fire in a jar, with new milk. When you are feeding the birds, mind you do not hurt their mouths with your stick. The best way to feed them is by means of a stick eight or ten inches long, having it tapered at one end, but blunt. Spread your food on it like a cake or a penny, so that when you feed the birds you only put the feed in their mouths, and not the stick. It will break off in their mouths quite easily. When they get older, so that they can pick for themselves, moisten their food with water, and make it crumbly moist, and add a few good ants' eggs. When the birds start to moult, give some cow patch grubs, mealworms, live ants' eggs, and seeded chickweed; and they will go on all right. When they are old enough for hard food, give them egg cake, bread crumbs, maw seed, and crushed hemp seed for their ordinary diet, with green food, wild grubs, ants' eggs, and plenty of good road sand to keep them in health. Then if they sing as mine do, you will not regret your trouble.

A FANCIER.

A New Society for Stratford and District.

Sir,—It is with pleasure I am able to inform you that a Fanciers' Association was formed on August 3rd, at the Mechanics' Institute, Stratford. It will be known as the "Great Eastern Feather, Fur and Bee-keepers' Association," and a fair number of cage bird fanciers have given in their names for membership (employees only), which includes some of the Leyton cage bird men; so I hope this section will go strong.

Borrowing Birds to Exhibit.

Sir,—I beg to congratulate Mr. D. Black and others, of the City of Glasgow O.A., in putting down the evil practice of borrowing birds to exhibit. I hope it will be a warning to all those who are guilty of this dishonest practice, not only in Scotland, but in England too. Lately I heard of a secretary reading out the entries, the night after the entries were closed, when there was only one entry in the class for foreign birds. The next morning there were two entries in the foreign class, and the second entry was made in the name of the secretary. Worst of all, the birds belonged to another man a few days before the show, and were returned to the man a few days after the show. I have been a fancier over forty years, but have never shown anything but my own bona fide property. Societies cannot expect to prosper until members do that which is honest and just by each other.

I wish my friends to understand
That showing in our native land,
Is honest, and a great delight,
If every man will do what's right.

To borrow birds to show is wrong,
And certainly cannot last long;
Alas, the little which they gain,
Their characters will ever stain.

Can Passengers Take Birds Out to Australia?

Sir,—Re the above subject, I went out as a first-class passenger to Colombo some years ago, and took with me a good sized cage containing a pair of Bullfinches. I kept them in my cabin, taking every precaution to prevent water, seed, etc., spilling about. I also used to take them on deck to bathe. No one ever said a word to me about them, and I never thought of having to pay for them. Of course, if one asks the shipping company, they are bound to make a charge. It is better to say nothing about them.

G. C.

Some Personal Experiences.

Sir,—In taking out birds to the Colonies, etc., I think the best way to do so is, if you are taking more than a pair, to ask the shipping agent the freightage for same when booking your passage. My sister returned to the Cape last month per Union Castle Line, taking back with her eight of my Yorkshire Canaries, including my Palace winner, and the charge was two shillings and sixpence per bird, Mrs. Downing providing the necessary seed and the cage. Of course, it is the best of policy when you get on board yourself to see Mr. "Butcher," and let him know that you are his friend, and that you will be a better friend when you arrive at the other side of the wet, if he has managed to get your stock over alive, and they usually do manage it all right. The butchers on board our liners, as a rule, have a large experience in carrying feathered stock. I remember a number of years ago when on my way to the Cape that at one of our ports of call a very stout German came aboard with a very large stock of German Canaries in the usual wicker cages on a stick. He attended solely to the birds himself, and soon the trouble began. First he lost them by odd ones; then it grew into numbers of dead each morning; and he only arrived at the Cape with the remnants of his stock. When we arrived at St. Helena, a native came aboard with a very long cage stocked with native birds he was taking on with him to Cape Town, and he got the lot there in safety. We had also on board a large stock of poultry and ducks, geese, etc., that were being taken out to the Colony, and it was passing strange to note how the fowls (cocks and hens) stood the passage without turning a feather, so to speak, while the web-footed birds looked as pensive as a lover out of luck, sea sick and sick of the sea, I suppose. I have also seen a number of birds, including a Laughing Jackass, on an Australian liner, and they looked "in the pink." I wish our friend good luck on his voyage, and would advise him to take his own seed with him, including a little maw, chalk for diarrhoea, and good old Epsom salts.

W. DOWNING.

A Canary with Air-distended Skin.

Sir,—Re a letter in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS, from a "Reader and Breeder," I should like to tell him my experience. Last year I had a nest of four promising youngsters, but when they were about ten days old, I noticed one of them had an air-bladder at the back of its head, about the size of a pea. As it grew larger I pricked it, before the bird was out of the nest, but it came up again, and I repeated the process when the bird was about three weeks old. After that there was no more trouble, but it never seemed quite healthy, and in the spring of this year it went thin and died. All the other birds were quite healthy and fit. I also should very much like to know the cause of this, and being only an amateur, should be glad to hear if any other breeder has experienced the same thing.

The Alleged Faking of Exhibition Linnets.

Sir,—I was sorry to see in CAGE BIRDS of August 5th, a letter from Mr. G. E. Weston respecting remarks I am supposed to have made at a lecture given before the North London C.B.A. members some time ago. The only way that I can account for these alleged remarks is that the notes must have been wrongly transcribed. The Linnet I had in my mind was not the bird which Mr. Weston mentions. That bird I remember perfectly well; and I also saw it tested in the presence of another well-known judge. I did not say "two years ago," but "some years ago," and the words "faked right and left" I never uttered. Then, again, I did not use the expression, "a London judge." If Mr. Weston is in any way annoyed by the report, I am very sorry. I have had the honour as well as the privilege of assisting him at the Palace on several occasions, and have always found him a most painstaking and careful judge.

GEO. MORTLOCK.

Sir,—Mr. Mortlock can rest assured that I am in no wise annoyed, for from the first I felt that the report in question did not accurately convey his remarks. His straightforward letter proves my suspicions to have been well founded; and with that, of course, the matter ends so far as I am concerned.

G. E. WESTON.

More Notes on My Pet Birds.

Sir,—Following up my notes in your issue of August 12, your readers may be interested to hear something more about my birds. You will remember that last year I had two Thrushes, "Baby" and "Joe," which paired up, built, laid eggs, and hatched out two young, rearing them for a couple of days. Afterwards "Joe," the hen, came to a sad end. Now this year things have not been quite so forward, but "Baby" took another wife, the only one I had to give him—rather a delicate little bird with a turned back claw and a drooping wing. She built a nest, but did not line it. The consequence was that when she had laid her four eggs they slipped through the hay, and she did not sit. After a time she built again in proper style, lining her nest with mud and cow-dung. She laid one egg as large as two ordinary ones, without any black spots on at all. This unfortunately broke. After this she was continually relining her nest, but never laid another egg that I knew of. Both birds guarded the nest the whole time, some weeks flying at, and biting the fingers of, anyone who touched it. On Sunday morning, August 4, "Baby" woke me by singing and flying from the nest to me, and then to the corner of the room, where the hen slept on a tiny round table. Of course, I thought there was an egg, but I could not see her little head peeping out; so at last I went to look. There was no egg, and no bird; so I went to the table, and just beside it the poor little bird had fallen dead. I supposed she was egg-bound. I had been afraid it was the case before; so I shall not get my wishes realised as regards these birds this year; but if all is well must try again next. Lately I have seen much in your interesting paper about Canaries rearing birds not their own. Here is something about a little hen I have. She had been paired to a Brown Linnet. The result was clear eggs. One day, while I was out getting the birds some wild seeds, I found the first and only nest I have ever discovered of a little Brown Linnet; it was right on the tip-top of a hedge, and had five eggs in it—a perfect little picture. I brought them home quickly. One of the eggs I broke; two I gave to one hen, and two to another. After six days one bird proved to have a clear egg, and one Linnet which she reared for three days only. The other brought out both hens, and reared them in the cage for a fortnight, when they escaped through the drinking hole. I could not find them in the little attic, so I opened the door, and let her out with the other little birds. She soon found them, and in three days was building in the window sill. She laid five eggs, and by this the birds could find her, and continually perched on the side of her nest while she was sitting. She fed them the whole time, and taught them to fly and find the seed box. Her eggs were again clear. She has now built in a mock tree I have rigged up for them, and I believe this time two of her eggs are full; but I don't know if it is a Brown Linnet or a Greenfinch cross, for I have not seen either of them feeding her. The other Canary has built again, too, and has two fine little bonnie Mules a fortnight old. I have also two Greenfinch Mules. The cock bird is singing nicely. Last season I tried, but got none; so I suppose I am learning, thanks to CAGE BIRDS, which I find always encourages those who have failures to try again. My two Cuckoos are still alive and well in themselves, though the tail and the wing plumage are still very bad. The three-year-old one called very often and loudly this spring. I have two young ones brought me by a little friend, one out of a Sparrow's nest, like the other two, and the last out of a Wagtail's nest. Curiously as things will sometimes happen, you had that very week an interesting account of a Wagtail's method of feeding a Cuckoo. The friend told me he heard the Cuckoo calling, and saw the little Wagtail carrying it a fly. He said he was sorry for a Hedge Sparrow that carried worms and grubs; but just fancy a poor little Wagtail that lived on flies and tiny insects having to satisfy a great bird like that. (I then showed him the account in CAGE BIRDS.) I noticed after what he said that that Cuckoo is much sooner satisfied than the other, and does not call half so much for food. At the same time it is the fattest and best feathered. This same friend brought me what he said was a young Skylark. It was rather old for hand-rearing, and would not gape or pick up food. After two days of opening the beak and forcing a little food down, it was suggested I should try if the hen Skylark would feed it; so I put it in the cage. You will know what a tiny bird it was when I tell you it ran straight into the drinking bottle ("Hydes"). I emptied the water, and endeavoured to get the bird out, but its long slender legs would not come, and its little sharp beak went up the narrow neck of the bottle. At last, in despair, I broke the bottle and got the bird out alive. But its one back claw was hanging. I tried to bind it up, and left it till the next day, when the little foot, being much inflamed, I drew it out; and would you believe it, from that minute it nestled down in my hand and opened its mouth for some food. It is now so tame that when I go in to feed the little birds I have only to call "Tot Tot" and it will come straight up to me, feed out of my hand and perch on my finger. It is, I believe, a Titlark, or Meadow Lark; no one seems to be quite sure on the point. It walks, and its little legs are so long and slender that it looks as if it is on stilts. It is very fond of flies and bits of hard-boiled egg and gentles. It revels in a bath, and goes to bed on the top of the tree, where I have thrown handfuls of seeding grass. I wish I could manage a snapshot camera, I would send you some lovely little pictures.

(MRS.) E. M. SARGEANT.

Interesting Observations at Everberg Aviaries.

Sir,—I cannot see why I should satisfy Mr. Millsum's curiosity as to who wrote "Aviator's" letter, but, to prevent misconception, I may say that it was not written by anyone who had crossed Mr. M.'s path, either in exhibition matters or in any other way whatever. As he has himself told us that he expected some such letter (after reading his own in print) and that, if he had written it as it appeared in print, he fully deserved it, I think he may look upon my remarks as impersonal and perhaps representing public opinion. However, as he tells us that his letter, as printed, does not represent what he wished to say, nothing more need be said about the matter. I do not think the "carping critic" figures largely in the correspondence column as a rule. Beginners are constantly telling us things which we all knew before, and no one comments on such contributions, putting them down to the enthusiasm of youth; and, if Mr. M. had not included any reference to his own achievements in his "interesting observations," I feel sure no one would have commented on them either, but it was really too funny that anyone should claim a world's record in the matter of avicultural experience and at the same time make it patent that he was not yet acquainted with one of the most elementary facts of bird life and bird-keeping. If Mr. M. cannot see this himself, he must be quite devoid of the sense of humour. Perhaps I should not, even so, have penned my letter if the correspondence column had not been a little dull lately, but, as this is what the newspapers call the "silly season," when the hot weather is popularly supposed to affect some people's heads, I thought it possible that, given a little encouragement, Mr. M. would perhaps write us some even more "interesting observations." However, instead of climbing up further, he has climbed down. As regards the probable holder of the record for personally attending to the wants of the greatest number of species, speaking from only a limited knowledge of the matter, I think it likely that Mr. Sutton could put in a strong claim if he wished. During the 20 or more years that he has had charge, either in part or altogether, of the Western and other Aviaries at the Zoo, he must have had to do with an immense number of species. I am, however, only making a guess; records are things that require a lot of looking into. As to the theoretical and the practical, I am not in Mr. M.'s line of business, so I cannot give an opinion, but I should certainly have thought that in the supervision of a large aviary, as in other professions, the theoretical man would have a big pull over the "rule of thumb" man. In conclusion, let me say that if my letter was too "sarcastic," I am sorry, because I should not like to hurt the feelings of any reader of CAGE BIRDS.

AVIATOR.

A Fall at the Last Fence.

Sir,—I am writing to let you know that I had no success with the Bullies; as, although three out of the five eggs were fertile, and the birds hatched out, neither the Bullfinch hen nor the Canary would feed them, so they all died. I took the Bullfinch's nest away, as she would still sit on the empty nest. As it is now too late for them to nest again, I must hope for better luck, if I still have the birds next year. I had some eggs from a pair of Chaffinches, which I put under a Canary, but though two hatched out, they only lived five days, so I was disappointed with them also. This is the first year I have had the birds. I have six young Canaries and a Linnet Mule; the mother of the latter is now sitting on two eggs. So I am hoping for another Mule before the season is over. I take in CAGE BIRDS every week, and always find a lot of useful information in it. BULL.

The "Champion" Singing Linnet

Sir,—I see Mr. Fred Allen, at Hull, makes a statement that there is only one champion Linnet in England, and that he has it. I wish to contradict this. Some months ago I was matching my Linnet with Mr. Allen's to sing for £5 a side, but unfortunately I fell out of work and could not go on with the match. But I met what he calls his cup winner, and another Linnet of his, in the big match at the King's Head, Leeds, on Whit Monday last, in what is know as "the Derby." My bird won first prize, beating 38 of the best picked birds of England, and Mr. Allen's cup winner got nothing (was pointless), and his other Linnet got the 6th prize. I also journeyed to Castleford next day (Whit Tuesday) and defeated 68 Linnets. So I think this will prove to readers of CAGE BIRDS which bird is the champion.

J. GREEN.

[While permitting Mr. Green to make the above statement, we wish it to be clearly understood that we have no intention of lending our columns to a wrangle concerning which party has the "champion singing Linnet." Such a point, if in dispute, is best settled by a friendly match. Any further correspondence on this subject must be brief and to the point. —Editor.]

Some Experiences of a Lady Bird Keeper.

Sir,—Two years ago I did not know the names of our British birds, let alone other varieties, and had no idea there were such beautiful little creatures as I now see along our country roads, for every small bird used to be just a Sparrow to me. I believe more than half the dwellers in country places take no notice of the different kinds of small birds; they regard them all as "Sparrows." I started to keep birds in the spring of 1910, and have about 50 now. Mine fly loose in a room, with a good outside flight. I have a pair of Goldfinches, which hatched three young out of five eggs, but they all died at a week old. I have lost several Canaries, too, at a week old, but could not tell the cause, for they had every attention. Like a correspondent in last week's CAGE BIRDS, I, too, would like to know the cause of air-distended skin in young birds. I have a young one, from a Crested hen, which when ten days old was just the same as the one described by "A Reader and Breeder." I did not prick it. In a few days the air had all dispersed, and now the bird appears to be quite all right. It is turned three weeks old, and out of the nest. I hope to become a successful bird breeder in time.

(MISS) L. A. KNIGHT.

Breeding Goldfinches in Garden Aviaries.

Sir,—This is an ambition that several readers of CAGE BIRDS seem to have been actuated by, and as I have reared young Goldfinches this season, the following may be of interest. In one of my garden aviaries, I had two exhibition cock Goldfinches, which were on very good terms with one another, until a friend gave me a house-moulted hen Goldfinch, which I turned in with them. The two cocks on the moment decided to be bitter foes, and did battle for the lady. This was settled by one of them being taken away, leaving a pair that soon appeared to be most suited to each other. The aviary is 8ft. long, 6ft. wide, with a domed top 8ft. 6in. high, part of it being covered, the rest all wire. In one corner of the open part I tied a number of thick branches of privet, placing for protection a piece of felt over it. They soon started to build their nest in this, of pieces of dried grass and moss, lining it with hair. Four eggs were laid, two of which hatched, the others had young birds in them, but evidently died about the seventh day. The young birds, which are now over three weeks old, are very strong, and flying about with the old birds; they seem quite content with their wired-in world. During the building of the nest and the sitting, the Finches were fed on good Spanish canary seed as the staple food, with tit-bits such as wild seeds, maw seed, and crushed sunflower, which I rang the changes with in a separate dish, with dandelion heads and groundsel as the green food. Since the young were hatched, I have kept four large glass bowls freshly stocked with ripe teazel, groundsel, shepherd's purse, and dock plants. These bowls are sunk into the ground so that they can't be blown over, and form the principal feeding ground for the old birds, who no doubt get a good many small insects on the plants, in addition. They have seeds, as before, but always a supply of crushed sunflower; no egg food has been given. The birds have never been interfered with, but the parent birds, which are very tame, show no fear, even when strangers stand by while they are feeding their young. The treatment has been very simple, and given house-moulted, steady birds, I don't see that there should be any difficulty in rearing our own winners in the Goldfinch classes. Next year I intend to try the foreign Finch with the British hen, and see if I can't get the size without the loss of the good tanning, which is so prized in our British Finch.

An Alleged False Report.

SIR,—In your issue of the 12th inst I notice a most scurrilous and lying report of a meeting and ramble in connection with the above society, concluding with the motion that the society had amalgamated with the Northampton Hand-in-Hand. To say the least, I think the fact that your columns are made to hold such lying reports as the one under notice will create a feeling of regret amongst the Fancy generally. Whoever the writer was, he must have racked his poor brain to have put together such a pack of lies, and, to say the least, it must tend to do his society a lot of harm in the eyes of legitimate fanciers. Our society is still as it was formed by a few enthusiastic fanciers, steadily on the up-grade, and it looks like making a strong one, despite this imbecile's dream. The members whose names he has mentioned in the matter have decided to leave no stone unturned until they have discovered this blackleg of the Fancy. I have been connected with the Fancy now for nearly thirty years, but never have I known a more wicked trick with a view to "down" another society. However, there it is, and I must leave your readers to draw their own conclusions as to why another society was formed. There is the old adage that those laugh loudest who laugh last. I hope you, sir, will endeavour, with us, to trace this person who signed this false report with the name of one of our members.

JNO. NASON, Hon. Sec. Northampton St. Crispin C.B.S

[We have also received a letter of protest from Mr. Fisher, the chairman. The report in question, was, on the face of it, just an ordinary, everyday kind of report, and was "authenticated" by the name and address of the alleged sender, Mr. T. Gammage. We are surprised that anyone should be so lacking in self-respect as to perpetrate a silly action of this nature. The fact that there is local friction (judging by Mr. Nason's remarks) is no sort of excuse. Possibly the sender is not aware that we have our remedy at law; and if we can discover the party or parties concerned in the matter they may find they have cause to regret their deplorably unfancierlike tactics.—EDITOR.]

DONCASTER AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held August 12th, Victoria Rooms. Mr. Truman presided over a good muster of members. Classification for open show was gone into; it was decided to extend it somewhat from last year, with the result as follows: 12 Yorks., 6 Nor., 2 A.O.V. Can., 2, Canary Sell., 1, Can. Mule, 1 Hyb., 11 Brit., 2 For. The committee are anxious to cater for outside exhibitors, and trust the above, judged by such well-known men as Messrs. Barnes and Maddison, will meet with universal approval, and that we shall have a good entry.—G. Beechy, Sec.

WEST OF SCOTLAND O.S.

Meeting held Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Mr. Wm. Gunion presiding. Several notices of motion for annual meeting were proposed. Mr. H. P. Hutchison made the awards for young Mules, which were as follows:—1st and special, R. Rinnie; 2nd, J. Pearce; 3rd, special, J. Sanderson; 4, R. Rennie; 5th, Martin; 6th and 7th, Jas. Sanderson. Secretary reported that Mr. J. Sanderson had happily recovered from a serious illness, and had been successful in winning points special with a total of 23 points. A vote of thanks was awarded Mr. H. P. Hutchison for judging.—Wm. Hutchison.

GLASGOW WEST END C.B.C.

Meeting held Clarendon Hall, August 11th, Mr. H. Jamieson presiding over a good attendance Classification for the annual members' show was fixed to the number of 65 classes—a considerable increase on last year. Other preliminaries were also arranged. The services of the following three well-known judges have been secured for the show: Messrs. A. Sloan (Glasgow), J. F. Dewar and L. J. Arrighi (Edinburgh). It is hoped we will be favoured with a record entry. Will all members please note that subscriptions are now due?—Wm. Proudfoot, Sec. and Treas.

GOLDSTREAM (N.B.) AND DIST.

On August 11th a few fanciers met together to wish good luck to our old friend Mr. W. C. Duncan (of Messrs. Duncan and Logan), who is leaving the district. Mr. J. W. Bruce was called to the chair. He expressed the feelings of the meeting in the matter of losing Mr. Duncan, and said that although Mr. Duncan was not going a great distance, they could not let him leave without a reminder of the many pleasant debates, etc., that had taken place since he took up the Fancy. In asking Mr. Duncan to accept a toilet case as a small token of the esteem in which he was held, he wished him the best of health and prosperity in his new sphere, and hoped he would have success in business; and although he had had to retire from the Fancy at present, he (the speaker) was sure he would be back as strong as ever on the first opportunity. Mr. Duncan, in a touching reply, said he was rather taken unawares with the handsome present, and also with the kindly feeling of the fanciers present. He hoped to be in the Fancy soon again. Mr. Gilchrist also wished Mr. D. and family good luck, and Mr. Logan, after a similar remark, expressed the hope that what the Tweed was losing the Tyne would gain. Mr. Duncan has cleared his entire stock, his well-known team of Light Mules having been purchased by a big English exhibitor; while the majority of his Borders have been secured locally. Mr. J. Smith (the noted amateur) and Mr. Gilchrist accounted for a few of "the cream" (both gentlemen have had a grand breeding season) so that things should "hum" this show season. Mr. Duncan is starting business in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and we hope to hear of his association with some of the Tyneside societies.—J. W. Bruce.

Under the White Rose.

SOMEBODY has been enquiring if I am still living, as nothing has appeared lately. Things, as a matter of fact, have been rather quiet, but, still, the work connected with the Fancy has been going on in a quiet way. The secretaries of the specialist clubs have been very busy getting the year books ready, and these will be in the hands of the fanciers before very long, quite in good time for them to see what trophies they will run for; and there are some rattling fine competitions to come on next season. The Y.C.B.B. and M.C. is the only club that has not its full complement of shows fixed, and the cause has been the clashing of dates. They are very unfortunate in this. It is disappointing both to those that apply, and to those interested in the welfare of the club. They have, I think, three shows still to place, and any society applying to the secretary for open dates will have a good chance of securing the patronage of the club, providing they fall on a vacant date.

ALSO the Yorkshire Union book is in the hands of the printers, and will soon see the light of day. As usual, it will be of great interest to all fanciers. The Cinderella Club Show is progressing apace. Various patronages have been secured, and the judges engaged; and much of the donkey-work has been got through. There is yet a lot of work in hand—classifications to be fixed, etc., etc. The club is to be congratulated on the splendid response it has received to the invitations issued to prominent persons to take part in the opening ceremonies. There is no doubt the show will be the largest and most successful effort ever made in Yorkshire, and will help to lift the Fancy higher than it is even to-day.

BIRDY men are now following with interest the trying time bird life is having, viz., the moult. This season the weather should be all in favour of a quick and effective moult, and a good moult does much towards the making of the birds; with a continuance of the fine weather, too, the first shows should be favoured with a capital entry, and the birds be well through the moult.

"STRAIGHT 'UN."

YORKSHIRE COUNTY B.B. & M.C.

Meeting held August 12th, at Market Tavern, Mr. F. Archer (president) in chair. There was a very poor turn-up of members, which was very disappointing, after having taken such trouble to try to get a good muster. The prizes for competition were gone into at once, and it was decided to give the following: £1 for first prize and 10s. 2nd in the champion section; £1 for first prize and 10s. for second in the amateur section. The club has three open dates left for patronage. Will any members having new address please send word as we are going to print handbooks. Advts. wanted for same; 2s. full page, 1s. half page. Subs. now due.—Lane and Jowett, Hon. Sec.

HAMILTON (Cadzow Oak) O.S.

A postcarded meeting was held in the Lesser Town Hall on Aug. 12th, Mr. W. Shearer (President) in chair. There was a good turn out of members, and we got through a good lot of business in regard to the open show, amongst which was that the secretary be instructed to write for the patronage of the Scottish P.C. and also the patronage of the Border Fancy Club. Then came up for discussion the recent City of Glasgow meeting, and the decision came to was that the secretary take no entries from Messrs. Graham and McFarlane and two other persons for at least two years, and any person known to exhibit their property at our show, and the same being detected, will have their prize money, if any, withheld.—G. Marlin, Sec.

WELSH C.B.C.

Annual general meeting, held Aug. 5th, Ship and Bell, Merthyr, when an appreciable number of members turned up, and good work was done. The secretary presented the balance sheet, and it is most gratifying to find the club is in a good financial position, having to its credit £17 10s. 9d., deposited at the bank. The following officers were elected for coming year:—D. H. Tedstone, chairman; R. Cleaves, vice-chairman; committeemen: T. L. Castree, J. J. Probert, T. H. Melhuish, W. Newell, E. J. Bevan, F. H. Cook, H. W. Sheldon, and G. T. Jones; auditors: W. Davies and D. Owens. Several important matters were dealt with. It was decided that we exchange medals with Toronto as before, and a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. J. Sandiford for his continued presentation of cup. The matter of patronage was left over until next committee meeting. At the close the distribution of cups and medals was proceeded with. The following were the season winners:—Leech cup (Canary section), D. H. Tedstone; (British section) T. L. Castree; Norwich Plainhead cup, D. H. Tedstone; Sandiford's cup, D. H. Tedstone; winners of medals, R. T. Cleaves, J. J. Probert, J. Hillman, D. H. Tedstone, J. H. Jones, and T. L. Castree. The secretary gave in his resignation, and explained his regret, he having to do so on account of business; but he expressed his desire to remain a member. This ended a most enjoyable evening.—G. J. Jones, Hon. Sec., pro tem.

No. 11.—My Francolins.

Pythagoras divided the market into three sorts of persons—those that went thither to sell, those that went thither to buy (both these sorts were a careful kind of people, and therefore unhappy) and those who went to see what was to be sold, and what was done. The last-named only were the happy people, because, being free from care, they took their pleasures freely.

I was reminded of these words some long time since when I went to visit a friend's aviaries. I set out, as I thought, to enjoy myself. I was not going to market, therefore there was to be no question of buying or selling; it was to be just a pleasant day's outing. But, alas! how little we know what a day may bring forth. No sooner did I get to my friend's place than I espied a bird I had been for years looking for, but never so far successfully. I had searched high and low, hither and thither—but always without any result. Now, here before me was what I sought, and I said to myself, "This is a day to be marked with a black stone." Alas! the event reminded me of a story told of Louis, King of France, the eleventh of that name. One day there came to the said Louis a man with a petition that he would bestow upon him an office that happened to be vacant in the town where he lived. The King, hearing the petition read, answers immediately, "You shall not have it," by that means putting him out of any future expectations. The petitioner immediately returns the King thanks, and goes his way. The King, observing the man's countenance, perceived he was no blockhead, and thinking perhaps he might have misunderstood what he said, bid him be called back again. He came back. Then says the King: "Did you understand what I said to you?" "I did," quoth he. "Well, what did I say?" "That I should not have it," said he. "What did you thank me for, then?" "Why," says he, "I have some business at home to do, and therefore it would have been a trouble to me to have danced attendance after a doubtful hope. Now I look upon it as a benefit that you have denied me the office quickly."

Crushed at Once!

Well, as I say, I was forcibly reminded of the anecdote. My friend absolutely refused to give me the bird, or to part with it at any price, and I had one only consolation, that, like King Louis, he refused me promptly. In fact, his words left not the slightest ground for hope. Still, I was pleased to have seen the bird, as it suggested to me that there might be more about, for I felt with the old Greek proverb, that one Swallow could not possibly make a summer.

Limehouse, Plaistow, and the East India Docks, to say nothing of St. George's Street, East, are places in the world to wonder about, yet even there beauty manages to creep in and grow in a soil where there would seem to be nothing but decay. There are shops which exist in these quarters, where endeavours are made to lift the mind to an appreciation of the beautiful in Nature, among the inhabitants of the East End. I believe their intentions are of the purest in the world, but what is the good of exotic birds to a dock labourer and his wife? True, I never pass these shops but I find an out of work sailor or a mob of little boys with faces eagerly glued against the not over-clean window, eagerly watching the gyrations of a monkey, or the hopping to and fro of some cage full of little Finches. But I don't believe it is genuine Nature study, but merely ennui—or idle curiosity.

A Pilgrimage East-wards.

Still, these shops have an irresistible fascination for me, and they attract my steps as easily as the pole draws the needle of the compass.

Therefore, no one will be surprised to hear that after seeing what I had I made a bee line from my friend's house to the East End, and St. George's Street. After a casual glance in at the window, I boldly entered and looked around. I passed from one row of cages to another, without finding what I was in search of. All of a sudden I passed out to the open air cages, and I could almost have shouted with excitement, for there right before me were the birds I wanted, and I felt inclined to repeat the words of Cromwell at the battle of Dunbar, anent the poor Royalists: "The Lord hath delivered you into mine hand." I did not stop, you will notice, to trouble about price, that was quite a secondary consideration; the birds were there, that was the all-important consideration.

You will naturally want to know what the birds were; so I may as well tell you. A man loves the truth, lives for it, dies for it, but very seldom tells it. For once, I will. They were Francolins. I can't tell you what sort of Francolins they were. There are too many varieties, I am told; but they were the first and only ones I had ever seen, and I determined that they should be mine.

Saving Himself Trouble.

There were some half-dozen of them on the floor of the big aviary cage, squatting on the sand in a corner. They were appallingly wild, and when not cowering in the corner, made wild rushes from one side of their prison house to the other. They looked plump and in good order, and I argued that birds that would run like they did could not have much the matter with them. The dealer very kindly caught the lot, and allowed me to pick what I considered a pair. This occupied so much time that he left me and went and had a nap.

Those of my readers who have had to pick a pair of birds of a new and unknown variety will understand that it is not a process that can be hurried. At one moment you think a bird is a cock, and the next you are as firmly persuaded that it is a hen; then doubts arise in your heart and the process is repeated, so long as you like to go on.

After about an hour of stopping and peering into the cage, where my new friends cowered before me, I made my final choice, and proudly carried off my purchases. I thought to myself, here you have a light and easy task; all you need is a big aviary full of tufty grass, quiet and patience, and you will win another medal, and cause envy, hatred and all uncharitableness in all your friends and relations. In the event you will see that I made a sad mistake, and the worst of it was I had only myself to kick, as I shall tell you—and I did it most heartily when the time came. Fortunately none of us can tell what a day will bring forth, or what poor, sad little mortals we should be.

I carried my new treasures back to Yorkshire, and turned them loose in an aviary that ought to have pleased the soul of any Francolin. I thought I should lose them right away, for they flew down the run like a thunderbolt, and bang they went against the end, causing the feathers to fly in clouds, and half stunning themselves. Luckily the aviary was full of coarse tufty grass, and in this they skulked and hid, or verily I believe they would have committed suicide. No neck could have stood many such bangs as that first one. I felt that to enter the aviary or even approach it suddenly was to court disaster, and I therefore gave stringent orders that nobody was to go near it.

Famous Sprinters.

I hardly ever saw these Francolins, although they are nearly as big as our English Partridge; all I ever did see was a brown flash passing from one tuft to another. Run! you never saw anything run so fast. They would have left a racing dromedary far behind.

Weeks and weeks passed, and though I occasionally heard them calling, I could gather but little of their domestic affairs. If ever I saw them feeding, it was only for an instant, and then they were off like a flash of light.

At last I got tired of waiting, and I determined to go inside and see what I could find. I was a fool to do so, as you will see; as if I had waited—well, who knows what might have happened? I had not gone three steps before I saw something slip out of a big tuft of grass, and stooping down I saw a whole nestful of beautiful creamy eggs speckled with red. I need not tell you what I did. I sneaked out of the aviary as quickly as ever I could, but I had a horrid suspicion that the mischief had been done. I had discovered the nest, and Mrs. Francolin knew it.

A WINNING BUFF NORWICH HEN.

First Prize at Stamford Show and other honours for Mr. J. Pedder (Luton).

The World a Blank!

Would such a shy bird ever go back again? I tried to think she would, but experience told me otherwise, and experience was right. The next day I went and looked, but the eggs were uncovered and cold. What was to be done? A medal was out of the question, as to win a medal the hen must hatch and bring up her own offspring. Still, if the hen would not do her duty, somebody else must be found to do it. At the time I happened to have a nice quiet little bantam hen handy, and to her I entrusted the precious eggs, some sixteen in number. She received them with all possible joy, and sat most religiously on them for eighteen days; when, as I thought, they ought to have "spratched." They did nothing of the kind, but remained firm and unbroken. Still, I did not like to be too sudden, so I gave them three days more, and then I tried them in warm water, when they all floated beautifully. But, watch as I would, there was no movement, not even I could deceive myself. They were as still as the dead. I broke one; alas! it was clear. I broke another; it was the same, and so on, and so on till I only had two remaining. I did not like to break these, as I wanted them to look at, but I knew by the way they floated there was nothing in them.

Too Many Cooks.

The poor little bantam had had all her trouble for nothing. Shall I tell you why? They were two hens, and they had both been laying in one nest. Now you will understand why I kicked myself. I had not chosen a true pair when I had the chance! But then, gentle reader, have you never made a mistake? If so, then you will be sorry for me. After all, these hens had done their duty—they had made a nest and laid eggs. What more could they do? The maternal instinct will always be the deepest in the world, no matter who may gibe.

I gathered afterwards from reading that my birds were Abyssinian Francolins. The feathers at the edge of the throat are spotted with black, feathers of the chest chestnut, mottled with grey and buff along the shaft, the head and under parts buff, striped with black along the shafts, and the sides and flanks, heavily blotched with chestnut and barred with blackish brown. The only distinction of male and female is that the female is rather smaller.

When I read these words I took back that kick I had given myself for was not my mistake excusable?

The call of my birds was very like that of our common English Partridge.

In vain I tried to get hold of a male. When I expressed my sore needs in the papers, Francolins seemed to have disappeared from the earth; at any rate, I got no answers; and at last in sheer despair, and to get a free aviary, I gave away my two hens to a friend, who does not attempt breeding operations, and so far as I know, they, like the stones which Joshua set up in Jordan, "are there until this day." I suppose I ought to have kept them till the male turned up; on the principle set forth by somebody, that choosing a wife was like choosing a profession—it doesn't matter much what you choose, so long as you stick to it; but there; as my readers know, I love change; but, looking back is fatal. The truest thing in Scripture is Lot's wife; she looked back, and was turned into a pillar of salt.

And now, lest I weary you, I will end with a story which the late Sir Henry Irving was fond of relating. He and Ellen Terry once consented to the request of a headmaster to give some scenes from Shakespeare before the boys of the school. When they were talking over the arrangements for the afternoon, Irving said: "The pieces we have chosen will take about two hours, and we must ask for a quarter of an hour's interval in the middle." "Oh, certainly," replied the headmaster," we couldn't expect the boys to stand two hours of it straight off." Do you see the parable?

Robins' Ways.

The doings of the Robins are now full of interest. The young ones are getting through the moult, and the more forward of them have commenced to warble. They have come in from the hedgerows and byways, and haunt the farm buildings and outlying cottages. Battles for supremacy have already commenced. One will keep his beat, driving off many intruders, until he in turn has to give place to a stronger rival. In these fights one is frequently killed, and in some cases both combatants.

The Note of the Curlew.

During the winter, when the Curlew frequents the mud flats by the coast, he has only one note which may be translated into "Clui, clui," but during the breeding season, when he has returned to the open moors and lonely hillsides, he has a peculiar fascinating whistle, very clear and vibrating, commencing in a low key, gradually ascending, and then falling again ends in a peculiar wail. This sounds very weird and uncanny when heard at night on the lonely moors.

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE

R.S.P.C.A. APPROVES MONKEYS' TEA PARTY!

Notes by the Secretary.

"The Animal World," the organ of the R.S.P.C.A., has in its issue for August the following reference to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE:

The R.S.P.C.A. and the League.

"The action of the R.S.P.C.A. and the R.S.P.B. in waging war against the cruelties of bird snarers and dealers, and decrying the practice of keeping birds in cages, seems to have aroused the fears of fanciers. At all events, an organisation has been formed bearing the above title to improve the conditions under which birds are kept in captivity, and to oppose undue interference on the part of those who would abolish altogether the hobby of bird-keeping. We would say bluntly that we have very grave suspicions as to the value of this League. The appeal for better treatment seeks to obscure the real issue, but will scarcely induce real bird-lovers to regard the captivity of our native songsters in any light other than that of a heartless cruelty. It should not be forgotten that in reversing the natural conditions of bird life 90 per cent. of these innocent citizens of the air die in the East End and other bird shops after their capture by the loafing prowlers who supply the market. It is to be hoped that persons will weigh these considerations before extending support to so doubtful a movement."

The Monkeys' Tea Party!

On another page "The Animal World" characterises the hysterical pamphlet entitled The Other Side of the Bars as being "an admirable little booklet." This admirable little booklet has already had sufficient attention at our hands, and need occupy no more of our time. It is instructive to note that "The Animal World" has been entirely silent in the matter of my reply in CAGE BIRDS of June 3 last to the extraordinary statements contained in the pamphlet in question. This reply was reprinted, and a copy especially sent to the Editor of our contemporary.

It happens curiously enough that in the same issue of the journal mentioned there is published a special article entitled A Monkey Tea-party. This gives a full account of the proceedings at the entertaining function.

Appended is an extract: and I wonder if any of my readers will care to give up their birds for the keeping of monkeys, so as to come under the approving eye of the R.S.P.C.A.!

"Through the kindness of the "Daily Mirror," I was privileged to be present at the tea-party given to monkeys, on June 6th, at the Waldorf Hotel, and, though I have a strong dislike to anything which tends to cruelty, what I there witnessed was a revelation as to the wonderful qualities these animals possess as pets.

"The owners were not principally children, as I anticipated, and the proportion of monkeys owned by gentlemen proved surprisingly large. There were monkeys of numerous breeds, size, and appearance, but all alike testified to the consistent care bestowed upon them, for their skins were exquisitely clean, their hair shone like satin, and there was an entire absence of the perpetual scratching and nauseating effluvia always associated with caged monkeys.

"I had plenty of time to note these details, as all guests with monkeys were closely congregated together in a vestibule, from which they passed into the ballroom; and it was very touching to see how the animals in excitement or fear at such unusual surroundings, clung confidingly to their masters for protection."

Left Unsaid.

Not a word is here said as to the probable number of deaths involved in the importation and training of such notoriously delicate animals as monkeys. Of course, the people who can afford the luxury of ownership of trained baboons and chimpanzees have more money than the ordinary bird-fancier; they are more likely to be fox-hunters, stag-hunters or shooters of farm-fed pheasants—possibly subscribers to the funds of the professional Humanitarian Societies—and it is inadvisable to offend them. The more humble bird-lover is in a different position, and any stone is good enough to throw at him.

I had written further on this matter, but just upon going to press there comes a letter from a member, Mr. Claude St. John, and I am glad to give this preference. I will, therefore, here content myself by publicly asking the Editor of "The Animal World" two questions: What is his authority for the statement that 90 per cent. of the birds which form the bird-dealer's stock in trade die while in his hands? What is the percentage of mortality in fresh-caught monkeys, and the average life of those who survive importation into this country?

Coloured Seals for Correspondence.

In accordance with the suggestion of a member, Mr. Johnson, of Studley, small gummed labels in exact fascimile of the badge of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, are now available for the use of members. They are printed in five colours, with the words CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE in gold, and may be used for sealing envelopes or for affixing to notepaper or postcards. I am now using them in all correspondence, and many members will therefore have seen them. To those who have not I can say that they are very pretty, and have a nice effect in use as seals or on note paper. The price is eightpence per hundred post free. Members, I am sure, will like these little coloured seals. Orders for less quantities than a hundred will be supplied at the hundred rate, but must be accompanied with an extra penny for postage. Now, members, just try a hundred and see how very effective they look upon your stationery; you will be pleased, I know.

More Local Hon. Secs.

Since my last notes the following gentlemen have kindly agreed to act as Local Hon. Secs. for their towns and districts. Pamphlets explaining the aims and objects of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE may be obtained from any of these gentlemen, and I should be glad if intending members in the towns mentioned will make their applications for membership through their Local Hon. Sec. Previous lists appeared in CAGE BIRDS for last week and the week before.

MORE VIEWS OF MEMBERS

Sir,—I have been for a long time a reader of CAGE BIRDS, and have derived a lot of useful information from it. Although I keep only a few birds, and those of the commonest kinds, I should like to join CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, for it is certain that lovers of birds need some protection from the cranks, or our hobby will become a thing of the past.

DUGALD BROWN.

Barrow-in-Furness.

A Generous Lady Member.

Sir,—Thanks for so kindly sending the packet of LEAGUE pamphlets, which I shall be pleased to distribute among my friends. In acknowledgment, I enclose P.O. for two shillings and sixpence, which please place to the funds of the LEAGUE. May I have, besides my brooch badge, which I cannot always wear, a rolled gold pendant for my watch chain, for I want this little messenger to work hard in arousing notice and interest. Wishing this splendid CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE all the success it deserves.

(MRS.) M. B. PARTRIDGE.

Worthing.

A Bradford View.

Sir,—CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE should receive the support of all fanciers; firstly, for the sake of establishing a bond of good fellowship, and, secondly, for the defence of our hobby against the troubles that are arising at the hands of Health Committees and others. It affords me great pleasure to accept your invitation to become hon. secretary for this district. I will bring the LEAGUE to the notice of my society at the earliest possible moment.

F. RHODES,
Sec., City of Bradford O.S.

Monkeys in Human Garments.

Sir,—Here are two cuttings from the current issue of "Animal World." The one referring to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE containing practically a "profession of faith," showing clearly the aims of the other party. Compare their hysterical and false accusations of the cruelty of keeping birds in captivity, and their desire to totally suppress the practice, with their attitude towards the practice in vogue among people of position of keeping pet monkeys, dressing them in human trappings, boots and shoes, and all the rest (all so very kind and natural, don't you know!), and altogether making such a degrading spectacle of themselves and their monkey captives as that described in the article on "A Monkey Tea Party," which, by a strange irony appears in the same issue. Does the comparison show their honesty of purpose? So long as these emasculated specimens of humanity can be preyed upon by unscrupulous sentimentality to provide the sinews of war to persecute another body of fanciers for the sake of notoriety, so long will the keeping of captive monkeys dressed in human garments, be looked upon as certain evidence of the owner's kind and humanitarian principles, whilst the cage bird keeper will be held up to public opprobrium as a "loafing prowler" by these sanctimonious hypocrites. A loafing prowler, forsooth! Why, any decent bird fancier would be simply nauseated at witnessing the indecent display of promiscuously mauling some measly monkey, so often indulged in by these sickly sentimentalists. Harsh terms these, did you say, sir? Well, our opponents have set the tune by opprobrious epithets with which alone they see fit to refer to the bird-keeping fraternity. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you" is a principle as applicable in this sense as its original one, and when these folk choose to refer to bird-keepers in terms of common courtesy, then, and only then, can they expect to meet with a similar measure of courtesy.

CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

Are You a Member? If Not, Why Not?

Sir,—The leaflets describing the aims and objects of the LEAGUE are handy little documents, containing sufficient information for anyone who wishes to know more about this good thing, CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. When their curiosity is aroused, then is the time to put the question, "Are you a member? If not, why not" I do not think any sensible persons could give a single reason why they are not members of a League which will protect their hobby from destruction by people with large pockets and small minds.

J. SOMERS.

Belfast.

The Oppression at Millom.

Sir,—I think the action taken by the Millom authorities is simply outrageous. If it comes to a test case I propose a fund be started through CAGE BIRDS to assist Mr. Park, as he is not a member of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. If it is only a penny fund there should be quite a sufficient response. I commend this idea to our readers and Leaguers. Please say if Local Hon. Secretaries are entitled to use that title in their correspondence.

G. A. WATSON,
Local Hon. Sec.

Parkgate.

Answer.—Certainly Local Honorary Secretaries may use their title whenever they please. —H. J. F.

Sir,—I would like to see that whatever help is possible is given to Mr. Park, of Millom. By doing so we shall further help to cement the good-fellowship already existing in CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, and also to swell our numbers.

A. J. NOTLEY,
Local Hon. Sec.

Hetton Downs.

To-morrow Never Comes.

Sir.—I was astonished to read in your Notes the report of the Millom case. It is certain that everyone who wishes to protect his or her hobby must join the LEAGUE at once. If all fanciers go hand in hand we can fight against this trouble. Join now is the thing. Don't wait until to-morrow; it never comes. I am delighted with my badge.

A. JOHNSON.

OUR FREE BOOKLETS.

I have still some of each of the sixpenny pamphlets on British Bird Culture and on Canary and Hybrid Culture, and, as long as they last, one of either will be sent gratis to all new members applying for a copy at the time of joining. Those of the old members who have not yet had a copy may receive one of those reserved for them on sending a penny stamp for postage. Only one copy of either book can be sent free either to new members or old, and when the stock in hand is exhausted I may not be able to get a fresh supply, so that those who would make sure of getting one of these useful pamphlets should send on their application with their membership fee without delay.

One-half of such donation or subscription may be allotted to any individual object of the* LEAGUE.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The qualification for Vice-Presidentship is an annual subscription of not less than half a guinea, and one-half of this subscription may be allotted to either the Literature Fund, the Defence Fund, or towards the purchase of special prizes to be given at any show nominated by the subscriber. Country Rambles

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Fortune again favoured us at our recent second ramble round the Dukeries. The weather was delightful (not too hot), and there was a nice cool breeze, though rather dusty if we had kept to roads, but as we were after bird life, the woods were our rendezvous. As there had been about two hours' rain in the early morning, everything looked fresh and green. A number of us left Sheffield by the 9.30 a.m. train, the remainder to follow at 1.40 p.m. The number that turned out with the first detachment was not as great as we should have liked. As usual we took train to Worksop, where we were met by our fellow member, Mr. Albert Summerfield. I think he must get the tip how to breed Mules there, as he goes over nearly every week, and Albert has managed to breed about 28 Mules this season; we trust he will have something good to keep the name of Sheffield to the fore. Our next move was to headquarters, Greyhound Hotel, our jovial host greeting us in a bright Yorkshire fashion. He is one of those fellows that makes you feel at home at once, and it is a pleasure to be under his roof. After we had refreshed, friend Summerfield took us out for a stroll, to various places of interest. We, of course, kept as much as possible to wooded patches and fields, as we were anxious to see as much bird life as we could. There are some fine birds in the Worksop district—no doubt a lot of Palace winners if they were only staged. The first lot that attracted our attention was a number of Chaffinches, one a particularly fine specimen. Goldfinches and Bullfinches were in great evidence, and a very fine Chiff-Chaff presented itself about this part. Yellowhammers, Wood Warblers, Blue Tits, etc., were all in evidence. After a quarter of an hour's rest we again commenced our stroll, journeying on through fields. We here came across a Hedge Sparrow's nest containing four young. As soon as we approached they took to their wings. I think it was their first flight, for it was not a very lengthy one, only a few yards. We now commenced the return to headquarters, as it was approaching one o'clock. Our journey was not a long one, as friend Summerfield knows all the short cuts. Once at the hotel we partook of refreshments, had a good wash, and then were ready to do justice to our host's efforts. Dinner finished, it was time to go to the station to meet our second party, but no one seemed inclined to go; everyone wanted to follow out the old adage, "After dinner, rest a while." And they did, one of the party only going to the station. He met his colleagues on the way. Our friend, Mr. T. Simpson, who on the last occasion took us such a successful route, was again in command. He had promised on the last occasion to take us an entirely different route; and he proved as good as his word. For a short distance we had to keep to the road, but we soon found our goal—the Duke of Newcastle's estate. We had not proceeded far before we came across a perfect shoal of Bullfinches. This is the place if you want to catch Bullie. There was a perfect plantation of privet, all in bloom; there will be some berries here for you "Britishers" shortly. And this was the attraction for Bullie. One of the boys turned himself into a call bird. He laid down amongst the dense bracken, out of sight; it is, by-the-bye, nearly four feet high in this particular part. The only thing we were short of was a few limed twigs. After this entertainment, which we all thoroughly enjoyed, we proceeded on our ramble. "Bullie" (which our friend was called for the remainder of the day, and I think will be called for a good many days) changed his call for his pipe, and shortly after changed his pipe for a feed of wild rasps, a regular Bullie's trick. I suppose this would be to keep his voice in training. We here came across a path in the depth of the woods where we saw most of the larger kinds of birds, including Jays, etc. A lovely specimen of the Jay was seen with his mate, the latter carrying out domestic duties. A little further and we again came across smaller birds—Blackbirds, Thrushes, Linnets, etc. We kept looking at our watches and noted how quickly the time went, and our guide told us we should have to take a cut through the woods or we should not be at the hotel in time for tea. We reached the hotel in time, and after a good swill, we were at it (the tea, I mean,) I think our host tries to go one better every time. We had one drawback; I think two or three had made up their minds for a sacred concert, but as the pianist was otherwise engaged, we had to resort to other enjoyment, some going for a stroll, and others resorting to a quiet smoke and chat, etc. The time passed all too quickly, and train time arriving (at 8.40) we went home. After reaching Sheffield we adjourned to headquarters, where we concluded a most enjoyable day, one member stating that he could do with these rambles every Sunday—he can't be married, I should think.—John A. T. Woodall, Press Correspondent.

We very much regret that the above has had to be held over some little time.—Editor.

TIDESWELL C.B.I.S.

Annual N.F. Show held Star Inn, July 28. Though the season has not been generally good, some fifty odd birds were shown, and some very fine specimens were present, especially in the Norwich section. The judges were Mr. Harris (Eckington) for Yorkshires, and Mr. Driver (Normanton) for Norwich; and great satisfaction was given. The show closed at 8.30 p.m., when a social evening was spent. A photograph was taken in the afternoon. NOR. CL. YELL.: 1, sp, F. Millward; 2, 3, W. Millward; vhc, hc, W. Flint; c, A. Flint. BUFF: 1, sp, vhc, W. Millward; 2, hc, W. Flint; 3, c, Longstone. YELL. HALLAM & ECCLESALL

The 59th annual show took place August 17th. By permission of the City Council the Endcliffe Park was the venue. The entry in the cage bird section was a capital one considering the lateness of the season, more specimens being on view than on last year's occasion. A huge tent provided cover, and the staging was very neat. Mr. R. Colton acted in his usual efficient style as chief steward, and was ably assisted by Mr. A. Somerfield, the noted Mule and Hybrid expert. Both worked like Trojans, and are worthy of the highest praise. Mr. J. H. Barber is treasurer of the Society. Mr. E. C. Job, the secretary, is the right man in the right place; a more capable official it has not been our pleasure to meet for many a long day. This very enterprising society one is bound to sympathise with. On many occasions the show day has been "dogged" by rainy weather, and on this occasion the great strike affected them very considerably. Dozens of exhibits were absent, being at the various stations. Stewards were present at the stations doing their level best to get them to the show ground, but their efforts were of no avail. Mr. J. C. Barnes (Sheffield) judged, and his awards met with universal approval.

HOLMFIRTH.

On August 19th the annual show was held at Holmfirth. The cage bird section, an interesting feature, was well supported, especially in Canary A.V. class, for which nineteen birds were entered. Three of Messrs. Radley's exhibits—owing to the non-running of trains—arrived too late. The judging was delayed an hour and a half. Mr. C. R. Hampshire made the awards: A.O. CAN.: 1, r, Hellawell, 1 nice Yellow, wing marked Cinnamon York.: 2, hc, Heywood; 2, upstanding clear Yellow York.: 3, Bray, heavily varieg. Yorks.; ex 3, Brook, cl. Yell. York.; ex 3, Hampshire, nice Lancashire Plainhead; vhc, Sandford; c, Dickenson. A.V. BRIT.: 1, Green, very fine Brambling, would have shown to better advantage in larger cage; 3, Brooke, very nice Goldie.

LLANRWST.

Vale of Conway annual show held August 17 in glorious weather. The cage bird section turned up well in numbers and quality. The occasion proved very interesting, and the attendance was good, so many visitors being in the locality this time of the year, the season being in full swing. We feel sure that they would be well supported if there was an extended classification. The birds were under cover at Guydr Park, and were staged at a nice height. The secretary was Mr. Watling, who is the right man in the right place. Messrs. J. Williams, A. Hughes, and Owen Williams, were the stewards; they all deserve a word of praise. Special for best cage bird was awarded to Mr. J. O. Williams' young yellow Yorkshire, a bird of great promise. Mr. C. H. Wheeler (Birmingham) made the awards, and gave satisfaction. GOLDFINCH (10): 1, Ed. Jones, grand, typical Finch, good blaze, under col., tail, and markings, nice bars and buttons; 2, J. E. Jones, nice shaped, good blaze, fine col. and feather, beaten only in size; 3, W. A. Evans, a wee shade smaller, good col. and markings, well shaped head, blaze nicely cut away, good depth. CAN., A.V. (15): 1, 3, sp. best in show, J. O. Williams, grand shape, fine quality, col., length and position, cl. yellow Yorks., 3rd rattling good buff Yorks., neat shape, lengthy and stylish; 2, Owen Jones, variegated yell. Yorks., nice quality; vhc, R. Williams, Yorks., cl. Buff.

Club Reports.

KELTY AND BLAIRADAM C.B.A.

Meeting held August 8th, Mr. Jas. Stenhouse (pres.) in the chair. A letter was received from the Border Fancy Club granting us their patronage. As it is too early to draw in collecting books, specials, etc., it was agreed to hold a sub-committee meeting on Aug. 22nd for that purpose. Also that a general meeting be held on Aug. 26th.—A. Dickson, Sec.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

Meeting held headquarters, All Saints, Battersea Park, August 12th. In the absence of Mr. Macgregor, Mr. Denham was voted to the chair. The secretary reported that a very fair profit had been made on the two Y.B. shows, and that no complaints had been received. The treasurer paid out prize money due to members who were present. I regret having overlooked to notify the date of meeting in Fancy press, which no doubt accounted for several absentees.—J. W. Burgess, Assist-Sec.

HEBDEN BRIDGE, ETC., O.S.

At a meeting held August 10, at Nutclough Tavern, Mr. W. Spencer in the chair, it was decided that we hold a series of shows. The first of these will be held at headquarters on August 31, when two classes will be provided, viz., 1 A.V. Can., 2 A.V. British, Mule, or Hybrid. Judge, Mr. T. Meadowcroft. All birds to be staged at 7.30 p.m. Mr. Maiden kindly promised a medal for most points throughout season; also a special for 4th most points; the society providing specials for 2nd and 3rd most points. Decided that we hold our annual old bird show on December 23rd. Mr. T. Bentley (Cleckheaton) judge.—A. Pickles, Sec.

THATTO HEATH AND DIS. O.S.

Meeting held Nutgrove School, 14th August. There was a fair muster of members, Mr. Cibbie, as usual, occupying the chair. Resolved on motion of Mr. Hesketh and seconded by Mr. Woods that Mr. Houlton be appointed judge at the forthcoming old bird show, to be held January 20th, 1912. It is not definitely arranged just where the show will be held, but negotiations are being made for a suitable place. The classification was gone into, and a splendid list has been arranged—32 classes in all, and it is hoped members and friends will pull together and make the fixture a big success. There was a lot of debating over a cup or medals for this show, but eventually it was decided to leave these over until the society gets a little further advanced. The usual vote of thanks was passed to the Chairman.—Tyson and Leather, Secretaries.

UDDINGSTON AND DISTRICT O.S.

Special meeting held August 19th in Reading Rooms, Mr. H. Dormon (Vice-President) in the chair. Balance sheet of Y.B. show was read over, after having been audited by Mr. Cosgrove, showing receipts of £4 7s. 9d. and expenditure of £1 15s. 8d., leaving a balance of £2 12s. 1d., which was paid out in prize money—2s. for firsts, 1s. 6d. for seconds, 1s. for thirds. Everyone was satisfied with this result, the show being considered a big success, taking into consideration the fact that close on 1,200 miners were on strike in our village. Letters were read by the Secretary from Mr. G. Smart (Carmyle) and Mr. Bald (Bathgate) re judging open show; their terms were considered satisfactory, and it was agreed to engage them both, Mr. Bald for British and Mr. Smart for Norwich. Hearty vote of thanks to chairman brought a very enjoyable meeting to a close. Note: Regular meeting on Thursday, 31st, at 7.30 p.m.—Jno. Kilpatrick, Sec.

COWDENBEATH C.B.S.

Meeting held Aug. 19, in the Arcade Hotel, Mr. J. Simpson presiding. The classification was gone over, and finally passed as follows:—Scotch Fancy, 10 classes; Border, 10; Nor., 12; Yorks., 6; Crest, 9; C.B., 8; A.O.V., 1; Common, 1; Gift, 1; Mules and Hyb., 5; Brit., 16; Foreign, 3; making a grand total of 71 classes. Stewards were appointed: S. Fancy, Messrs. J. Paterson and B. Rice; Bord., J. Fotheringham and J. Baxter; Nor., J. C. Murray and A. Simpson; Yorks., A. Cunningham and P. Langan; Brit., A. Anderson and A. Robertson. Secretary reported we had been granted the patronage of the Border Fancy C.C., and we have had granted since the meeting the patronage of the Fife and Kinross Norwich F.C. Instructions were given secretary to procure all the necessary goods etc., for show. It was agreed that all collecting hooks be in the hands of the secretary before next meeting, September 20, when special prizes will be allocated. Usual vote of thanks brought meeting to a close.—Joseph R. Reid, Sec.

LANCASHIRE C.A.

Meeting held at Duke of Edinburgh, August 12th, Mr. J. Naden in chair. A good number of members were present. Minutes of previous meeting passed with the exception of one re cages, which now reads "That all members must show in the club standard cages to compete for the club's specials." It was decided to give our patronage to Rochdale O.C.; to Manchester, to Newcastle, and also to London C.B.A., on condition that they provide at least four classes for Lancashires, as we do not guarantee to support under four classes at any show. We are still open to extend our support to suitable applicants. All fanciers who would like to become members can be enrolled by paying 2s. 6d. for membership, which entitles them to compete for the club specials; and this would bring us more together, so that we could try and put the giant of the Canary tribe more to the front. Place of next meeting will be announced. In the future applications for membership, etc., may be sent to the Secretary.—J. Hampshire, 7, Cowper Street, Oldham.

YORK C.B.S.

Meeting August 14, headquarters, All Saint's Church Rooms, North Street. The chairman (Mr. Zimmerman) presided. A large number of members and friends were present to hear a lecture on "Wild Seeds and Berries," by those two well-known authorities, Messrs. H. Shorney and F. B. Sissons. In the absence of Mr. Sissons, Mr. Shorney dealt in a very masterly way with his subject, giving the names of each wild seed and plant, where to find the plants, and how to use them to the best advantage. The lecture was closely followed. After a good number of questions had been satisfactorily answered by the lecturer, a hearty vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. A. Richardson, seconded by M. Chittenden, for the amount of time and trouble he must have spent in gathering and bringing such a large assortment of seeds, berries, and plants. After the lecture, the members went into committee on the open show business. It was proposed that four members, along with the chairman and secretary, should form the open show committee. The following is the result of the ballot:—Chairman (Mr. Zimmerman), Secretaries (H. Thompson and Sissons), Committee (Messrs. T. Wright, S. Campling, Cbittenden, and White).—H. Thompson, Hon. Sec.

The Least Musical Month.

The month of August is undoubtedly the quietest of the year, as far as bird song is concerned. Old birds are moulting and are far too sickly to think of song. The only birds singing are the early young ones, and these are only recording and learning, their music being a poor apology for the grand melody of early spring and summer.

Will fanciers please note that my address is No. 6, High Fishergate, Doncaster, writes Mr. Geo. A. Pogmore.

We hear that Mr. J. O. Williams (Bangor) is elected to judge the cage birds, etc., at Dolgelly Show on September 15 next.

Newley is still "the" man for show cages, etc., first-class work; price list 1d. stamp.—R. A. Newley, 24, Stockwell Green, London, S.W. —Advt.

Mr. A. Gledhill having resigned the secretaryship of the Morley and Dist. C.B.S., writes Mr. D. Holliday, I beg to notify you that I have been elected to fill that office. My address is 25, Wesley Street, Morley, Leeds.

We have been granted the Northern Border Fancy Canary Club's Medal for our annual show on December 1st and 2nd, and the English and Welsh Border Fancy Club's patronage, writes Mr. J. Johnson, Secretary, Lancaster Primrose C.B.A.

To obtain the best results in colour feeding, you must use Ramsden's peppers. Cheap peppers mean failure, therefore shun them. Ramsden's pure peppers are fully guaranteed. Sold only in canisters bearing Ramsden's label and coupon. See Foods. (Advt.)

I was both surprised and pleased on receiving my weekly paper, CAGE BIRDS, on August 19th, to see the splendid drawing of my Yellow hen, reproduced on the front page. Allow me to thank you for same, and to wish your paper every success.—C. E. Walker (West Bowling, Bradford).

Owing to the great success of our ramble on July 22, writes Mr. W. Mallinson, Sec. of the Wallasey and Dis. C.B.S., we are having another ramble to Bedstor via Wallasey Marsh for wild seed gathering on Sunday, August 27. We start from Headquarters, at 10 a.m. Will members of local societies and friends kindly join and make the ramble a huge success?

My new illustrated list of aviaries, cages, appliances, etc., is now ready, and fanciers can have a copy of same post free on application, writes Mr. R. Hogg, the well-known naturalist, etc., of Middlesbrough (17, Bridge Street, West). My list includes everything required by a fancier, the goods are of high quality, and at low prices. Show cages are a speciality for the coming season.

An excellent coloured plate of the Red-capped Parrakeet graces the August number of the "Avicultural Magazine." The artist is Mr. Hubert D. Astley, who also contributes some notes on the species. Mr. C. Barnby Smith writes on "Another Nesting Failure: The Rufous-throated Tree Partridge," and Mr. Archibald Simpson on "Some Experiences of an Aviculturist." There are other matters also of interest to bird-keepers.

The contents of the August issue of "Bird Notes"—the Foreign Bird Club's journal—include articles by Mr. Mark Aronstein ("The Nesting of Hoopoes"), Mr. H. W. Matthias ("The Breeding of Ruficaudas, Painted and Olive Finches"), Mr. Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. ("The Nesting of the Indian White Eye") and Mr. Hubert D. Astley, M.A., etc., ("The Queen Alexandra Parrakeet"); a picture by Mr. Astley is reproduced as a coloured frontispiece accompanying his notes.

Our next meeting is on August 28 at the Volunteer Hotel, at 8 p.m., when the Open Show, Rules, etc., will be discussed, writes Mr. Jas. Irlam, Hon. Sec. of the Sale Open O.S. Will all who intend remaining members of the Society send in their names at once, or better still attend the next meeting? The Open Show is guaranteed against all loss, and we are having some very good specials for members only, besides the open Challenge Cup, and I hope to see all old members and intending new ones taking part in the next meeting.

It is with regret, writes Mr. J. W. Dummett, Sec. of the Cardiff and Dist. C.B.S., that I have to leave Cardiff. Hence all my birds and cages, etc., are for sale. I have taken over a business at Tiverton (my old home) where I shall have to put in full time; so I shall not take up the keeping of birds for a time. I may have another "pop" some day, although I shall have to find out what sort of fanciers we have down that way. I am sorry to leave the Fancy and my friends in Cardiff, and I hope they will get a good successor in the secretarial office of the Society. I have enjoyed my time here (8 years) with them, and a real good lot they are. I hope they will have a big show this year, for they well deserve it.

From Mr. G. Davidson, of Glasgow (94, Kirkland Street), we have received some really splendid samples of wild seeds—thistle and hard-heads, and plantain, with the extracted seed of the dandelion, plantain, thistle, and shepherd's purse—all excellent for birds, especially during the moulting season.

Will exhibitors and all concerned kindly note that we have engaged Mr. Bowman (Glasgow) again to judge the Yorkshire Canaries at our open show to be held on Nov. 11, writes Mr. George Marlin, Sec. of the Hamilton Cadzow Oak O.S. Mr. Bowman judged last year and gave every satisfaction.
